Most D. C. 'Gas' Sellers Accept Night Closing Plan

Leaders Say Bulk Of 4,000 Workers Affected Will Be Given Day Jobs

The nighttime "blackout" of 100,000 gasoline stations in Eastern United States suggested yesterday by Petroleum Coordinator Ickes brought favorable response last night from Washington area dealers and is expected to become almost completely effective in the entire area through cooperation of the oil industry.

Spokesman for Washington and Maryland operators said the trend was "strong" toward compliance with Ickes' suggestion that stations be closed from 7 p. m. to 7 a. m., beginning Sunday night, as a fuel-conservation measure.

Ickes said he had "no doubt" the idea would be acceptable to oil men throughout the Atlantic Seaboard since it originated with them.

Reports that some 4,000 workers in the Washington area would be thrown out of jobs by the move were discounted by spokesmen for the industry. It was the general opinion that most of the filling station attendants now employed at night would be absorbed in daytime staffs "in one job or another."

Washington has about 675 stations within the city proper. There are 400 stations in nearby Maryland and Virginia, each employing an average of six persons.

"The trend," said Harry R. Wainwright, research director of the Washington Retail Gasoline Dealers Corporation, commenting on local response to the plan, "is strong toward compliance with Mr. Ickes' proposal."

Wainwright said he had conferred with most of the major companies in town—large chain concerns as well as independent dealers—and they expressed approval of the idea.

"We would much rather ration hours than fuel," said Wainwright.

Russians Get Licenses To Export U. S. Oil

Russia's Amtorg Trading Corporation has received export licenses from the State Department for considerable volumes of petroleum products, it was said yesterday by Ralph K. Davies, deputy petroleum coordinator. Priority rating on the manufacture of 10,000 steel drums for use in shipping aviation gasoline and other petroleum products was recommended to the OPM yesterday by Davies' office. Priority rating for additional drums will be asked as needed.

Arrangements are being made for tanker service from the West Coast to carry oil to Russia.

Christian Science Banned by Hitler

Berlin, July 31 (AP).—A ban on the practice of Christian Science in Germany, effective immediately, was announced today by Dienst aus Deutschland, authoritative news commentary.

Dienst said Adolf Hitler gave the two-sentence order, which said:

"The sect of Christian Science is forbidden in all German territory immediately. The prohibition is based on an order of the Reich president for the protection of the people."

Christian Science reading rooms in Germany were closed nearly two months ago.

Man Drowns, Another Saved On River Trip

Marooned Girls Taken Off Cabin Cruiser By Mt. Vernon's Crew

A Federal Bureau of Investigation employe was drowned in the Potomac last night as a friend who tried to save him was rescued in the nick of time.

The dead man is Elden M. Crosby, 27, of 930 Sixteenth Street Northwest, a fingerprint classifier. His friend, Herbert Callinan, 24, of 916 South Wakefield Street, Arlington, also a FBI classifier, was taken from the water by a lifeboat crew from the S. S. Mount Vernon, and collapsed from exhaustion.

The lifeboat crew, commanded by "Pete" Turner, the steamer's purser, also rescued two girl companions, marooned on Callinan's anchored cabin cruiser, from which they witnessed the tragedy and attempted rescue.

The girls are Mary Hague, 1711 Nineteenth Street Northwest, War Department employe, and Genevieve Welsh, 2410 Twentieth Street Northwest, who works in the Census Bureau.

According to Callinan, Crosby dived in for a swim from the anchored boat, 9 miles south of Washington, about 9:10 p. m. Crosby immediately cried for help and sank. Callinan dived in after Crosby, but was unable to find his companion, and the heavy tide swept him downstream.

The girls' scream attracted the attention of persons aboard the Mount Vernon on its moonlight cruise. Capt. H. S. Hall halted the steamer, put out a boat, and landed the two girls and Callinan at Marshall Hall, Md.

Earlier in the day, Marshall Robinson, 17, Negro, of 54 G Street Southwest, drowned while swimming in Washington Channel.

Installments Dispute Delays Prices Bill

Revised Measure Now Due for Introduction Today or Next Week

By Hedley Donovan
Post Staff Writer

Dispute over regulation of installment buying yesterday delayed introduction of the Administration's price control bill, now tentatively scheduled for today or early next week.

The bulk of the far-reaching legislation was believed acceptable to the chairman of the Senate and House Banking Committees, who will sponsor it, but the bill was still undergoing revision late yesterday.

Federal Price Administrator Leon Henderson and Representative Steagall (Democrat), of Alabama, chairman of the House banking group, conferred more than two hours yesterday, with installment purchasing apparently the major obstacle to an agreement on the bill's final form.

Henderson and other influential Administration officials are known to regard strict regulation of installment credit terms as essential to any general plan of price control.

Raises Basic Issues

At the same time Government economists concede that curbs on private credit arrangements would raise Constitutional issues as well as complex problems in administration and enforcement of price control legislation.

Although Steagall insisted last night that the entire bill is still in the draft stage, Congressional leaders were believed to be in substantial agreement on provisions which would:

Authorize President Roosevelt to fix ceilings on commodity prices, based on average prices

Senate Talk Ties Up Draft Holdover

Wheeler Warns Of Voters' Wrath; Resolution Expected To Pass Next Week

By John G. Norris
Post Staff Writer

Senator Wheeler (Democrat), of Montana, yesterday warned members of Congress to "watch out" for the next elections, if they pass the service extension bill, but he and other opponents conceded that the measure will pass the Senate.

The noninterventionist leader held the limelight during the second day of Senate consideration of the controversial measure, which would hold selectees, reservists and National Guardsmen in service indefinitely. After more than five hours of speech-making mostly by opponents, without action on any amendments, Administration leaders gave up hope of passing the bill this week.

Willkie Under Fire

The Montana Senator charged that the motion picture industry was waging a campaign for war, through "war propaganda" films. He declared that Navy bands were being used to "stir up and get crowds" for "war rallies" and that Wendell Willkie is leading the "whole campaign."

"He and his little clique of Wall Street bankers, together with the motion picture industry, are trying to stir up sentiment to take us into war," Wheeler declared, pounding his desk for emphasis.

Several opponents of the bill hit the War Department for barring soldiers from expressing their opinion on the measure. Senator Tobey (Republican), of New Hampshire, invited selectees to write him their views on the question, even though long-standing Army regulations bar soldiers from petitioning members of Congress on pending legislation.

Invites Protests

Tobey made public a telegram he had sent a constituent, declaring that "when a man enters the military service of the country he does not become a subcitizen, and that the right under the Constitution to petition is not superseded by any military edict."

Senator Vandenberg (Republican), of Michigan, likewise challenged the Army's stand, and declared:

"If the War Department declines to allow selectees to say they are opposed to this bill, the War Department should withdraw the testimony of Army officers saying the men favor this extension of service."

Several Army commanders, including Maj. Gen. Milton A. Reckord, heading the Twenty-ninth Division at Fort George G. Meade, Md., composed of District of Columbia, Maryland and Virginia Guardsmen and selectees, testified during the hearings on the bill that 80 to 90 per cent of their men were willing to stay in service.

Moscow Salient Beaten Back Again, Reds Say; U.S. Accepts Japan's Apology for Bombing

Tutuila Incident Closed by Tokyo's Quick Amend, Offer To Pay Indemnity

By George Bookman
Post Staff Writer

The United States last night accepted a formal Japanese apology for the bombing of the American gunboat Tutuila and President Roosevelt declared the incident closed—just a day after it occurred.

The State Department announced that Japan, claiming the bombing was entirely accidental, offers to pay indemnification in full for damage caused in the raid and promises to take concrete and detailed measures to prevent repetition of such incidents.

The swift and complete Japanese apology for the incident Wednesday on the Yangtse River was brought to Sumner Welles, Acting Secretary of State, by the Japanese Ambassador, Admiral Kichisaburo Nomura, acting by official instruction.

The promptness of the Japanese apology and its completeness convinced American officials that Japan has been deeply impressed by the force of the economic warfare undertaken by the United States last week when Japanese troops walked into Indo-China.

In addition, it was felt at the State Department that the swift American representations over the bombing incident that were made Wednesday by Welles had their desired effect in impressing upon Japan the gravity with which the Chungking affair was viewed here.

Nomura called on Welles at 6:45 p. m., an unusually late hour for a diplomatic call. He stayed ten minutes. As soon as he left, Welles conferred with the President by telephone and then made public to reporters the nature of Nomura's call.

Welles said that Nomura expressed the official regret of the Japanese government because of the bombing of the U. S. S. Tutuila, a gunboat that is part of the Yangtse River patrol.

Trade War Declared on Axis

Economic Defense Council Named, With Wallace as Head

W. W. Riefler, Noted Economist, Will Be Executive Director

By Alfred Friendly
Post Staff Writer

The long-heralded Economic Defense Board, created yesterday by President Roosevelt to wage economic warfare on Axis commercial interests throughout the world, will employ Winfield W. Riefler, noted New Deal and Federal Reserve Board economist, to serve as executive director, it was learned on reliable authority.

The new board, with Vice President Wallace as chairman, and consisting of the Secretaries of State, Treasury, War, Navy, Commerce, and the Attorney General, or their alternates, is expected to establish broad general policy to be carried out by various Government agencies, to drive Axis interests out of Latin America, to block their supplies of goods and credit and blast their attempts at economic infiltration in the Western Hemisphere.

Riefler, who since 1935 has been a professor of economics at Princeton University's Institute for Advanced Study, is expected to head up the research of the new board and to be in direct charge of translating policies into direct anti-Axis drives.

Refuses to Protest Blacklist; Putsch Smashed in Argentina

By the Associated Press

Friction between Germany and Latin-American governments reached new heat last night, with Mexico and Argentina in the forefront of the latest moves.

Mexico disclosed rejection of a German request that the Mexican government protest to Washington against President Roosevelt's blacklist of Latin-American firms deemed to be pro-Axis.

Mexican Foreign Minister Ezequiel Padilla made public an exchange of notes with German Minister Rudt von Collenberg and said the terms of the German message constituted a threat which Mexico regarded as "imperious and unacceptable."

A Radio Story

In Buenos Aires, police announced that a putsch against the Argentine government had been smashed in Entre Rios Province, a reputed Nazi hotbed, and it was disclosed that the Argentine foreign office told the German Ambassador to get rid of a portable radio transmitter. There was no mention of any connection between the two incidents.

The radio transmitter had caused a round of diplomatic arguments since its seizure by a Congressional committee investigating subversive activities in Argentina. After Germany protested, the foreign office prevailed upon the committee to return it. Now that the German Ambassador, Edmund von Thermann, has it again he will have to

Invasion Fear Grips Germans In Norway

General Sabotage And Open Revolt By Norse Reported

By the United Press

Stockholm, July 31.—A state of siege has been proclaimed in Aalesund, Norway, 150 miles north of Bergen on the west coast, after acts of sabotage and serious demonstrations against German occupation authorities, reports from Norway said tonight.

German communication lines and military establishments were believed the objects of the widespread sabotage.

Ten prominent citizens of Aalesund were arrested as hostages and taken away by ship, the report said. A crowd of 5,000 townsmen attempted to free the hostages by force at the pier and German troops were rushed in to restore order. The Aalesund police chief was compelled to resign, it was said.

Extensive exercises to prevent an invasion of Norway—presumably by the British—are being held at a number of west coast points and later will be extended along the entire coast, reports from the country said.

Thousands of inhabitants have been removed inland from seacoast towns and all sea traffic has been halted, it was reported. Maneuvers began yesterday and will continue through Saturday.

First exercises were centered in the Stavanger region, near the southern end of the west coast. Later "invasion exercises" will be extended to all points considered vulnerable to attack. Coastal artillery has been firing many practice rounds.

Soviet Regains More Ground in Center; Leningrad Facing Siege, Berlin Says

By the Associated Press

The Red command declared early today the Germans had been thrown back in the Smolensk sector before Moscow in new Soviet counterattacks.

This Russian success in the battle for the great decision at the center—claimed in the face of earlier German assertions that the Soviet armies were being encircled there, had been defeated in the south and repulsed in the north—was reported in an early morning Moscow communique.

As to the remainder of the front the Soviet war bulletin completed a 100 per cent denial of the Nazi version by insisting that fighting was proceeding in unchanged sectors.

Moscow was raided by German bombers again last night. The Russians acknowledged several Nazi planes broke through the capital's defenses and dropped a few incendiary bombs.

Unofficially, the Germans declared drives from north and south on Leningrad were proceeding so successfully, although against resistance of the most spectacular sort that the city might soon be put under actual siege.

Unofficially, the Russians insisted to the contrary that not only were the Germans still beating against unyielding walls but that the defense was in fact turning into a war of attrition which would break the Nazi invasion and thus open the way for a supreme Soviet counter effort.

Planning Great Counteroffensive

Soviet military informants in London stated the Red command already was making plans for a great counteroffensive with three million or more Soviet troops, intending to set it loose within two weeks if the Nazis by that time had substantially expended their reserve strength.

These same informants, incidentally, spoke impatiently of their longing for more British aid than has been forthcoming.

There were in London rather sharp Soviet words to the effect that British effort in aid of Russia had been principally confined to air raids on occupied France and Germany.

Berlin's military dispatches claimed the German armies moving on Leningrad from the south had destroyed seven Soviet divisions of 100,000 men or more along with a Russian regiment which was annihilated in its efforts to break out of encirclement west of Lake Peipus.

U. S. Plans Dummy Ships, With Crews, For Bomb Targets

Copyright by New York Tribune, Inc.

The Army is planning to build four dummy battleships at a cost of one million dollars each to provide sea-going targets for practice bombing by the Air Corp's heavy four-engined bombers operating in the substratosphere, it was learned yesterday.

The target vessels will be approximately 175 feet long with thick decks so that the dummy bombs striking the deck's surface will not penetrate.

Even dummy bombs, dropped from the 30,000 to 40,000 foot altitudes at which the big planes operate are dangerous to ordinary ships. A 100-pound bomb loaded with sand, and dropped 27,000 feet has a terminal velocity of 1,260,000 pounds when it hits the deck.

The boats will carry crews of from 30 to 40 men.

Real Hero There, Too

4,000 Jam Street in Hollywood Style at 'Sergt. York' Premiere

The Nation's Capital took a leaf out of the film capital's book, mixed it with a deep and determined breath and blew up such a fanfare for the premiere of "Sergeant York" last night that a Hollywood producer admitted:

"I've attended many a premiere in my day, but I have never seen such a demonstration as you citizens of Washington are putting on here in honor of this great soldier, Sergt. Alvin C. York."

The words were those of Jesse L. Lasky, veteran producer who is responsible for the film version of the World War hero's life.

They were spoken into an N. B. C. microphone in the lobby of the Earle Theater amid the glitter and glamour and glare and clangor of klieg lights, searchlights, microphones, newsreel cameras, flash bulbs, white Army and Navy dress uniforms, evening gowns and everything else and more that goes with a first night in "the Capital of the world."

While a throng estimated by police at 4,000 jammed Thirteenth Street to watch the celebrites enter the theater, Lasky arrived with Sergt. York himself, Mrs. York, their son, Woodrow Wilson York; Undersecretary of War Robert P. Patterson; Maj. Gen. George B. Duncan, York's World War commander; Brig. Gen. Lewis B. Hershey, Selective Service director, and Gov. Prentiss Cooper and Senator McKellar, of York's home State of Tennessee.

Their automobiles formed part of a parade led by flag-carrying Boy Scouts and the Sons of the American Legion Drum and Bugle Corps, which had proceeded down F Street from the Willard Hotel, where the Tennessee State Society honored York with a banquet and reception.

Applause and cheers greeted the party as it stopped at the theater, and each paused before the microphone for a few words, according to Hollywood traditon, as he entered the lobby.

Asked by the announcer why he selected Gary Cooper to play the role of Sergt. York, Sergt. York said:

"Well, he's kind of a rough rider, he's a good shot and he's my kind of a man."

Attendance at the premiere was the climax of a two-day triumphal tour of Washington for Sergt. York. yesterday he made a whirlwind tour of the city, making speeches and giving radio interviews.

"When the time comes," he told the Tennessee State Society, "I can drive an armored car or a tank as far into the front lines as any young man." But, he added, "I hate war."

In Again, Out Again for One

250 Must Quit Grafton Hotel, Leased by British Commission

Approximately 250 tenants of the Grafton Hotel, 1139 Connecticut Avenue Northwest, were informed yesterday they must vacate their rooms by the end of August to make way for a new British commission which has leased the building.

Notices they must pack up and leave came to the Grafton residents on the heels of the now famous dispute over Federal leasing of the Dupont Circle Apartments.

At least one of those who must move is a former tenant of the Dupont Circle.

She is Miss Sue Srygley, employe of Senator Hattie W. Caraway (Democrat), of Arkansas, who laughed about her plight last night, explaining she had moved into the Garfton only July 15.

"I must be a Jonah," she declared, "and I am getting a little tired of moving. But after that battle at the Dupont this controversy here seems minor."

"I don't know where I'll go now," she continued. If anybody wants to sell out I'll take their room," she said, and added, "or maybe I'll just settle on a trailer."

Other tenants were more aroused about the necessity of moving. Mrs. Helen Birchall, Treasury Department employe, who resides at the hotel, met with nine of her friends in a protest meeting.

George C. Clarke, who owns both the Grafton and Ebbitt Hotel, said last night he had "leased the Grafton to the British Admiralty Commission on a two-year contract with renewal privileges thereafter. The personnel of this commission is now congregating in Washington and will move in September 1, he said.

Clarke said he had been in ill health for some time and for that reason desired to cut down his business activities.

British press officials could not be reached last night for comment.

Saving Daylight

New Time in Nearby Va. Hinges On Whether D. C. Has It, Too

Residents of nearby Virginia disagreed last night in their reactions to Gov. Price's announcement of yesterday that of cial state clocks will go on daylight saving time at midnight Sunday, August 10.

Whether business and industry generally in the Washington area will fall in line with the Governor's request appears to depend in large part on whether the District follows the wish of President Roosevelt for a nation-wide advancement of the clocks in the interest of defense.

If District Commissioner Guy Mason has his way, Washington will follow Virginia's policy and adopt daylight saving.

"I've always been in favor of daylight time for the District," Mason said, "and if either one of our neighboring States adopts the plan, it will be almost imperative that we do the same."

Commissioner Mason was the only city head available for comment after Gov. Price's order was announced. Previously, however, Commissioner John Russell Young expressed opposition to the daylight policy, "because Washington is essentially nonindustrial and present Government hours amount to almost the same thing."

Mason emphasized that considerable confusion would result if the District remained on standard time and its bordering communities—where a great many local workers live—operated on the daylight plan.

The Governor, making the announcement after conferring with Dr. Douglas S. Freeman, chairman of the State defense council, and J. H. Wyse, assistant defense coordinator, said that no expiration date for the daylight saving period would be fixed, leaving this to be decided in the light of future developments.

Frank C. Hanrahan, Arlington County manager, said last night that "there's something to be said on both sides," that the plan had as

Russians Say They Are Wearing Out Nazis

Soviets Preparing 3 Million Reserves For Counterdrive

By Drew Middleton
Associated Press Staff Writer

London, July 31—The Red command is preparing a counter-offensive of more than 3,000,000 Russian troops to begin within two weeks if by then it is deemed the German invaders have expended their reserves, Soviet military informants declared here today.

Russian reservists, it was said, are being assembled and completely equipped for this prospective push.

The thrust, if it comes, will be headed by great masses of tanks and armored cars covered by fighter and bomber aircraft, it was added, but it was indicated this would be the only similarity with the German advance into Russia.

Tanks Won't Rush Ahead

Red tanks, it was explained, would be kept in the closest contact with infantry and cavalry—this to prevent the Germans from repeating the Soviet maneuver of yielding to tanks and then closing in behind.

A Russian source claimed German morale already was shaken. Smiling broadly, he added: "In our propaganda to the German troops we are showing Hitler how his methods can be turned against him."

Meanwhile, as to Britain, there is a plain feeling in Soviet circles that aid to the Soviet should be reinforced with something more than the bombing of Germany and France.

The British explanation that short nights do not permit long-range raids and pleas that the army is not prepared for large-scale operations in Europe are met with sour looks.

Recall 1914

For Soviet sources say with some bitterness that in 1914 imperial Russia, although unprepared, answered the pleas of the British and French commands and launched the offensive into East Prussia.

True, these sources said, Russia thus lost two army corps in the resultant Battle of Tannenberg, but they say this sacrifice materially weakened the Germans in the west.

In Bolivia the government continued arrests in connection with an alleged putsch which was thwarted a fortnight ago when German Minister Ernst Wendler was ousted.

Uruguay removed a pro-Nazi editor from the Chamber of Deputies after an outbreak of mob violence attributed to his writings.

"Insinuation" Irks Mexico

In the Mexican-Nazi exchange the foreign minister told the German minister that "my government does not admit for one moment the insinuaton" of the Reich that President Roosevelt's program of economic warfare "violates Mexico's liberty of commerce and even her sovereignty."

In his note, dated July 28, von Collenberg said the "resigned acceptance" of Washington's anti-totalitarian measures could not help but "influence the decisions of the German government upon renewing commercial relations with Mexico after the war."

It was this statement that Padilla characterized as a "future threat" and a "position of pressure, imperous and unacceptable."

Nine Arrested in Argentina

In Buenos Aires, the orders to Von Thermann to "either re-export or destroy" his radio transmitter came after police announced they had broken up a "subversive plot intended to overthrow present authorities of Argentina" by arresting nine persons and seizing a large quantity of propaganda in the Entre Rios provincial capital of Parana.

Doors and walls of the raided houses were decorated with swastikas, police said.

The province lies northwest of Buenos Aires between the Parana and Uruguay Rivers. Geographically it controls the waterways leading to Paraguay, Bolivia and Brazil and faces Uruguay across the Uruguay River.

The portable radio has a history. A German attache was said to have taken it from Buenos Aires to Lima, Peru, by air as "diplomatic baggage." Peru refused to admit the package because it was overweight. So he returned to Argentina with it and the congressional investigators seized it.

"Elements of Propaganda"

They said the same baggage also contained "elements of propaganda" and that a full report would be presented to a federal court.

On the Chilean coast the diplomat, Wendler, waited for a ship to Japan as a result of his ejection by Bolivia as minister to La Paz. Wendler is scheduled to sail Saturday on the Rakuyo Maru.

Another German official in Chile, Consul General Paul Barrandon of Valparaiso, was given his walking papers a second time.

Barrandon was ousted last December on a charge he falsified passports for seamen of the pocket battleship Admiral Graf Spee who had escaped from Argentine internment.

He returned in May and was granted 15 days to wind up his affairs. Tonight the Chilean government told him to leave and he planned to take the first train for Buenos Aires.

It was after his return to Valparaiso that the German schoolship Priwall was presented to the Chilean navy as a gift and five German freighters quit Chilean ports in attempts to run the British blockade.

British Bomb From France To Finland

By International News Service

London, July 31.—British bombers, after ranging all the way to the northern Norway and across the Arctic reaches to blast once-friendly Finland, made a shorter trip tonight.

It was just across the Channel and back, but the attack was intense. Offensive patrols soared for a long time out from Dover. East of Boulogne, some German ships were visible and it was possible they received some R. A. F. attention and some R. A. F. bombs.

As details of the Petsamo bombing, during which an oil storage tank and warehouses were set afire, were released by the Admiralty, the Press Association said the raid didn't mean a state of war between Britain and Finland.

The fleet air arm, the Press Association said, was merely carrying out Churchill's policy of "striking the enemy whereever he may be found."

Convoy Bombed

And strike they did. In addition to the damage at Petsamo, the fleet air arm played havoc with a seatrain of German supply ships off Kirkenes, Norway, and with a German convoy off Helgoland Bight.

In the Helgoland raid British hell-diving pilots got close-range fighting down to a fine point in one of the most sensational raids of the war. They duelled with bombs against Nazi ships at 10 paces. The Air Ministry said British pilots, slamming into the convoy, took their multimotored, multitonned planes right on down to the masts of the ships.

One British pilot said he dropped his bombs from a height of 30 feet above water. Another bomber came home from Helgoland with part of a Nazi ship's wireless wrapped on the fuselage.

When the smoke cleared from the close-range attack, the air ministry said, six Nazi vessels had received direct bomb hits.

The Petsamo and Kirkenes attacks were declared to have produced equally devastating result. In spite of strong antiaircraft and fighter opposition, the harbor works in the Finnish port were said to have been damaged heavily, a German warship receiving a direct hit and four enemy planes being downed. But the British paid heavily for the damage, losing 16 of their own aircraft.

R. A. F. Bombs Seaplane Base on Sardinia

Copyright by New York Times

Cairo, July 31.—Royal Air Force planes flew hundreds of miles yesterday and attacked the seaplane base at Elmos, on the island of Sardinia, for the first time, according to official reports. Two Savoia bombers and hangars were set on fire, three flying boats were machine-gunned, and a heavy gun was put out of action by strafing of the crew.

Numerous other bombers were badly damaged. A Macchi fighter attempted to intercept but was driven off.

M. P. Arrested For Breach of Military Law

By the Associated Press

London, July 31.—Maj. Sir Herbert Paul Latham, 36, graduate of Eton and Oxford and Conservative Yorkshire member of the House of Commons, who lives in modernity in a "haunted" castle, has been arrested under military law, it was announced today with Parliamentary formality.

An authoritative source said only that the arrest was "for alleged offenses against military law," adding:

"Don't jump to conclusions. This merely shows that a military charge has been brought for some infraction of army regulations."

Trial Will Be Secret

The only chance that the public will learn what is behind the case, if at all, will come with announcement of the court-martial's decision. The proceedings will be secret.

Out of respect to the immunity granted to members of Parliament by civil law, King George VI commanded War Secretary Capt. Henry D. R. Margesson to "acquaint the House" today with the fact that Latham had been arrested. With traditional formality, the House thanked the King "for his most gracious message and for his tender regard for the privileges of the House."

The arrest, of course, was known to the membership before Margesson acted on the King's command. The London smart set already had been startled by the story.

Castle Has Two Ghosts

The arrest of the young politician and army man recalled his purchase eight years ago of Herstmonceaux Castle, in Sussex, built in the time of Henry V and once called capable of quartering an army.

He lives there, in a modernized wing of lofty rooms. His wife was Lady Patricia Moore, daughter of the tenth Earl of Drogheda. She obtained a divorce from him at Miami last May. Latham is the son of Sir Thomas Latham, first baronet.

There is a legend that within the massive castle a ghostly drummer guards a treasure trove and rolls his drum whenever the treasure is threatened. There also is the tale of a "gray lady" who on dark and stormy nights paces the grand staircase.

Reds Claim Gain In Smolensk Sector; Foe Cheated of Crops

By the Associated Press

Moscow (Friday), Aug. 1.—Strong Red army counterattacks have hurled the German invaders back with heavy losses in the bitterly contested Smolensk approach to Moscow, the Soviet Information Bureau reported today.

In an enthusiastic communique, it said, "specially stubborn fighting developed in the Smolensk direction, where our troops by counter-attacks threw back the enemy with heavy losses.

"We captured prisoners and booty. Our air force, cooperating with land troops, dealt blows to enemy mechanized units and infantry."

This latest counterthrust came, according to private Russian advices, after the Soviet forces had staved off 42 gigantic German attacks in the Smolensk sector since July 16, always retaining control of the key city which the Germans more than two weeks ago claimed had fallen.

Fighting in Old Sectors

Elsewhere along the front, the fortieth day of the war found Russian troops still fighting the Germans in the same familiar sectors, the Soviet communique said. These were around Porkhov and Novorzhev, roughly 150 to 200 miles southwest of Leningrad, and Zhitomir, the western approach to the Ukrainian capital of Kiev.

Besides supporting the Smolensk counter offffensive, the Red air force was credited with downing 15 German planes the previous day—Wednesday—at a cost of eight Russian craft, destroying 12 more on airdomes deep in the German rear, and with a dive-bombing attack which sank one German patrol boat and heavily damaged a second in the Baltic Sea.

On the basis of these reports of general successes, Russian informants began to speak of the war as developing into a campaign of attrition which they perdicted would break the strength and hearts of the invading Nazis.

Harvesting Against Time

The almost unlimited weight of the Russian millions, these sources declared, was absorbing the worst that the Nazis could send.

Behind the front the Soviet's collective farmers were proclaimed to be winning a second great battle—that of the grain fields—by harvesting a vast bumper crop free of serious German interference.

The harvest, it was said officially, was not only extraordinarily fruitful but extraordinarily rapid, especially in the Ukraine.

The Germans, said the Communist party newspaper Pravda, had loosed the invasion at a time when the Ukraine began to bloom heavily, hoping to hamper the harvest. But in this the Nazis had failed, the paper added.

In Leningrad the people were declared to be "leading a safe and normal life." A theater of "the peoples' armies" was created there. (These accounts of an unperturbed city were apparently intended to meet German claims that Leningrad's fall was imminent.)

Unofficial Berlin Sources Claim Deep Thrusts in Ukraine

By C. Brooks Peters
Copyright by New York Times

Berlin, July 31.—It is impossible on the basis of the military news about developments on the Russian front released in Berlin today to form any accurate judgment of the progress of the German invasion after its first 40 days.

The Germans assert they have made thrusts deep behind the lines of the "defeated and retreating" Soviet armies in the Ukraine, that the noose about the enemy forces trapped east of Smolensk has been drawn tighter, that in Estonia the Russians have been thrown farther back in a northerly direction and that last night Moscow and the railroad junction of Orel, some 180 miles south of Moscow on the route to Kharkov, were bombed from the air.

Officially, the Germans continue to place emphasis not upon the Eastern Front but upon the West and the so-called British "invasion" from the air, which, it is asserted, has failed.

Claim Progress Continues

Authoritative military quarters emphasized today that fierce fighting continues on the East Front. This does not mean, they hasten to add, that the German drive has been halted; the attack of the Reich's forces, they assert, is making progress in all sectors.

["Furious" counterattacks by Russian troops trapped by German forces all along the Eastern Front have failed and the "most important and valuable portions" of the Soviet field armies have been lost, an authorized spokesman said today, according the United Press.

[The Russians are pouring vast new reserves into the struggle to free their encircled forces and heavy fighting is in progress at many points, the spokesman said, but "the Soviet armies are beginning to crack."

Report Leningrad in Peril

[Nazi sources boasted Thursday that Leningrad is being swiftly encircled and faces "utter destruction" unless it surrenders and reported that seven Red army divisions of about 100,000 men have been wiped out at the approaches to Russia's second city].

[The pressure of German and Finnish armies on Leningrad, second city of Russia, increased by the hour tonight, the Associated Press said, and in Berlin speculation arose as to whether the city soon will be placed under actual siege.]

Most of the information which the Germans reveal about the East front comes not from official military quarters but from D. N. B., the official news agency. It is, moreover, relatively unimportant because it reveals no geographical locations and thus makes an accurate checkback against reports issued on preceding days impossible.

Red Air Force Still Active

Yesterday, D. N. B. declares, the German air force, operating in the Smolensk sector, destroyed 27 pieces of enemy artillery, 33 tanks and 140 motor trucks.

The Russian air force, frequently reported destroyed, appears from front-line dispatches of German correspondents to be still militantly functioning on the fighting front. Yesterday German bombers "protected by pursuit planes" are credited by D. N. B. with having raided an enemy airfield behind the enemy lines east of Smolensk. "Hundreds" of heavy modern bombers, pursuit planes and transport planes are reported to have been lined up on the field. The German bombs, however, are said to have made a "chaos" of the enemy air base.

Sidelights of the War

Nazis Use Loudspeakers To Amplify Waning Gunfire

By the Associated Press

Moscow, Friday, Aug. 1.—Russian dispatches from the front said today the Germans were trying tricks to conceal the steady decline of their forces.

For example, it was said, Russian troops heard machine-gun fire rattling in a wooded sector as though Nazi gunners were busy behind every tree and bush. Russian scouts, however, could find only one machine-gun nest.

Investigation disclosed that a microphone and a series of loudspeakers had been set up to spread the clatter throughout the woods.

Free French Ace Scores

London, July 31 (AP).—A Free French flight commander who already has won a Distinguished Flying Cross shot down two German Messerschmitt 109's over the French coast during the British attack there this afternoon, the air ministry news service reported. He was said to have damaged a third plane.

Egypt Cabinet Changes

Cairo, July 31 (AP).—Premier Hussein Sirry Pasha reshuffled his cabinet today to obtain an overwhelming majority in Parliament. The cabinet resigned, then was reformed under the same premier with members of the ultra-nationalistic Wafdist Party excluded.

In the new cabinet are five members of the Saadist Party, led by the pro-British Ahmed Maher Pasha, who, earlier this year, refused to participate in the government because he favored a more active Egyptian role in the war.

Teasing Von Ribbentrop

London, July 31 (AP).—The British Broadcasting Corporation in a German-language broadcast tonight, invited German Foreign Minister Joachim von Ribbentrop to tune in on London at 8 Sunday night (1 p. m. Eastern Standard Time.)

"It will surely interest you, Herr Reichsminister," the announcer promised, without explanation.

98 Communists Shot

Berlin, July 31 (U.P.).—Increasing "Communist sabotage" in the Banat region of Nazi-held Yugoslavia resulted in the execution today of 90 Communists before firing squads, the official D. N. B. agency reported in a dispatch from Belgrade.

New Zealand's Loan

Copyright by New York Times

Wellington, New Zealand, July 31. Subscriptions to a new war loan were called for last night in an announcement by Finance Minister Walter Nash. In presenting the budget to Parliament he offered bonds for five years at 2¼ per cent, or 3 per cent for a ten-year period.

Nash said the loan's purpose was to meet a portion of the cost of the war, which this year is estimated at £69,000,000, almost half of which is being provided by Britain.

Italian Legion Joins Magyars On East Front

By Camille M. Cianfarra
Copyright by New York Times

Rome, July 31.—A special communique today announces the Italian expeditionary corps has reached the zone of concentration on the Russian front. Although failing to reveal the specific sector to which the troops have been assigned, Italian correspondents with the corps stated it is somewhere in Hungary.

It is expected, therefore, the Italians will fight in the next few days. Reports they were already in the line of fire have not been confirmed. The number of the troops dispatched is, of course, a military secret. Other contingents are expected to be sent in the near future, as indicated by Premier Mussolini's review earlier this week of legions of Blackshirts.

The fact that Italians will fight side by side with Hungarians is held to have its distinct political significance. Italy is Hungary's friend, which country she has steadily aided in fulfilling its national aspirations. This, it is stressed, will be another bond between the two.

Today's communique admits that British planes carried out a daylight raid on Cagliari. At the same time, Axis planes, the communique asserts, sank an oil tanker and seriously damaged a merchant ship off the Cyrenaican coast.

In discussing Italy's army, Roberto Farinacci, in the Regima Fascista, today strongly criticizes its organization and advocates "totalitarian" reforms which would do away with defects shown in past performances, and especially scored the plan of mobilization, which he termed absurd.

Tokyo Paper Hints Move On East Indies

By International News Service

Tokyo, Jul. 31.—There was no relaxation yesterday in Japan's move southward under terms of its agreement with Vichy for mutual defense of Indo-China, and one authoritative Japanese newspaper intimated that the move into Indo-China might be only a step toward further activities in the Pacific.

Commenting on the Dutch East Indies' announced decision to halt any further flow of oil to Japan, the Kokumin Shimbun said:

"The action of the Netherlands East Indies, following the leadership of Great Britain and the United States, is a manifestation of hostility. The East Indies will be fortunate if they realize the motive behind the increase in the number of troops in Indo-China."

The government appointed Lieut. Gen. Shojiro Iida as high commander of all Japanese armed forces in Indo-China.

There was no official announcement of the number of troops Japan is sending to Indo-China, but a Chinese military spokesman at Chungking estimated that Japan is presently withdrawing 100,000 soldiers from China. He said withdrawals have already begun from North China and that there are indications similar withdrawals are imminent from the central and southern fronts. This, he said, explained why there was little activity on any Sino-Japanese fighting front, aside from the Japanese air raids on Chungking.)

(The British Exchange Telegraph news agency quoted the Swiss radio as announcing another Japanese bombing attack on Chungking today in which 90 planes participated. The Soviet embassy there was said to have been destroyed and the British embassy damaged.)

The official Domei wireless reported receipt of dispatches from "somewhere in Kiangsi province" indicating war was being pressed in China regardless of the new activities to the south. Since early yesterday, it said, Japanese forces have been encircling Chinese troops of three divisions in northern Kiangsi province and that Japanese air units have inflicted severe casualties on the trapped Chinese. It also was revealed that the government will follow a policy parallel to that of the United States with regard to the freezing of American assets in Japanese-controlled areas.

The Tokyo branch of the National City Bank of New York was reopened under limited operation. Branches of the Standard Oil Co. of New York resumed sales after a 24-hour stoppage when the government gave the company permission to resume depositing its collections.

Assets of nationals of Australia, British Burma and British Malaya will be frozen effective today, it was announced, in retaliation for the freezing of Japanese setts.

Meanwhile, German Ambassador Eugen Ott was received at the foreign office by Acting Vice Minister of Foreign Affairs Kumaichi Yamamoto for a discussion of Axis affairs. And Premier Prince Konoye discussed domestic matters with Mitsura Toyama, head of the "Black Dragon Society" and acknowledged patriarch of Japanese patriotic organizations.

Moscow Visit Strengthens His Confidence That Germany Will Lose, Says Hopkins

By the United Press

Moscow, July 31.—Harry L. Hopkins, American lend-lease administrator, said tonight after a three-hour conference with Premier Josef Stalin concerning American aid to Russia that his short visit to Moscow had "added to my confidence that Hitler will lose."

Hopkins declined to add anything to his statement last night that he was offering immediate American material aid to Russia, made after his first conference with Stalin.

Before going to the Kremlin at 6 p. m. for his second conference with the Premier, Hopkins conferred with Foreign Commissar V. M. Molotov and went on a shopping tour, during which he purchased gifts for his daughter, Diana. He dined at the famous Caucasian Restaurant with United States Ambassador Laurence Steinhardt and his staff.

The official Soviet spokesman, S. A. Lozovsky, paid tribute to Hopkins for demonstrating the United States' determination to aid Russia and "all nations struggling against Fascist barbarism."

In his tour Hopkins said he was amazed at the "insignificant damage" caused in seven mass bombing attempts by the German air force, the last attempt watched by Hopkins from the roof of the American Embassy.

Discussing Hopkins' whirlwind conferences here, following his dramatic airplane flight from London, Lozovsky said:

"The United States determination to aid all nations struggling for independence against the Fascist barbarism again has been demonstrated."

The procedure of providing United States aid to Russia in fulfillment of President Roosevelt's pledge was reported to have been greatly advanced during the past 48 hours since Hopkins' arrival in Moscow, accompanied by the United States military aides.

In his first talk with Stalin after his unexpected arrival by air from London, Hopkins already had established a foundation for a program designed to start a speedy flow of American war materials to the Soviet Union.

Meeting Minimized in Rome

Copyright by New York Times

Rome, July 31.—The press today attempts to minimize the meeting of Harry L. Hopkins, United States lease-lend administrator, with Premier Josef Stalin by saying American help to Russia will come too late. Moscow, it states, is now doomed and the next few weeks will prove it.

At the same time Britain is described as powerless to aid her eastern ally, and the proof of this is sought in the alleged slackening of the British air offensive over western Germany, said to have been beaten off by the Nazi air force and to have cost the British 600 planes.

Report Tells Of Japanese Plot in U. S.

A confidential report on Japanese activities in California, made to the House Committee on un-American Activities, was obtained by The Washington Post last night.

Replete with names, dates and other detailed information, the hitherto secret document, makes these assertions:

1. That the Japanese consulates in Los Angeles and San Francisco have organized Japanese residents of California for "sabotage and espionage purposes."

2. That the organization, which the report refers to as an "espionage gang," divides the Japanese colony into three groups, depending on whether they are farmers, fishermen, or engaged in other trades, and assigns specific subversive tasks to each group.

3. That "all the Japanese farmers are required to live or move as near as possible to areas where oil wells are strategically located; to furnish and keep up to date accurate diagrams, maps, plans for new wells, extent of operations, etc., of the oil fields."

Obliged to Cripple Oil Industry

4. That these farmers were obligated to "cripple the operations of the oil industry in California" in case of war between the United States and Japan.

5. That 90 per cent of the Japanese fishermen in California were either trained sailors or Japanese naval officers.

6. That these fishermen report shipping movements to the Japanese consulate and, "in the event of actual conflict between the United States and Japan, this group is charged with the duty to commit acts of sabotage on all shipping off the California Pacific Coast."

7. That the third group of Japanese, composed of cooks, butlers, gardeners, laundrymen, etc., is changed with the "duty to destroy or seriously cripple vital utilities, tunnels, bridges, etc.," in case of war between the United States and Japan.

8. That the Japanese authorities in California maintain a complete record of each Japanese in California, his home address, place of employment, marital status and similar information.

Exposures Threatened

The report was written for the Dies Committee and submitted to them April 15, 1941, by Rankin Daugette, a native of Jacksonville, Ala., who was at that time employed as a Dies Committee investigator on the West Coast.

Daugette said yesterday that he was making his report available to The Post as an individual, not in his capacity as a former Dies investigator. He wished it understood that the report did not necessarily reflect the views of the Dies Committee.

Representative Dies, committee chairman said yesterday he would expose subversive activities of Japanese and other agents in this country unless the Government put a stop to them.

A committee official declared last night, however, that the Chairman's remarks were not based on the Daugette report, which he said Dies has not seen.

Between 3,000 and 5,000 Japanese commercial attaches are still in this country, Dies said, despite the abrogation of the commercial treaty with Japan. He threatened to make public all the testimony and other information in his possession unless the Government took steps to get rid of them soon.

The President's Day

By International News Service

CHRISTMAS: Every day is Christmas at the White House but yesterday's haul was especially fancy. From the British Isles came gifts galore. To the amused amazement of the onlookers, tall, ultra-dignified Lord Halifax came loping into the Executive offices looking not so much like an ambassador as a door-to-door canvasser or travelling salesman. Under both arms milord carried bulging bundles of strange and fanciful sizes and shapes. After the unwrapping the President had on his desk—an oil painting of himself by Frank Salisbury; a gold medal from the Royal Academy of Art; at long last, the McCoy and official diploma from Oxford University conferring honorary doctor of civil laws upon the President with much fancy scroll work and Gothic printing; a handsomely bound copy of the late Lord Lothian's collected writings and speeches.

BALLET RUSSE: The usual parade of business suits and brief cases was also broken up by a fascinating band of Russians-in uniform. Led by Ambassador Oumansky, Gen. Phillip I. Golikov and Gen. Alexander Repin marched through the outer lobby, hung their caps, emblazoned with the hammer and sickle, outside and went in for a halting interpreted conversation with Mr. Roosevelt.

JIGSAW: Pieces of the Japanese puzzle kept falling into place. After Secretary Morgenthau of the all-important Treasury departed, Lord Halifax, and Mr. Roosevelt talked at length about the Far-Eastern situation.

SHORT ORDER: Jesse Jones' expectation of a leisurely lunch with the President was blasted by the pressure which bore heavily on the White House. Luncheon guest Jones was in, fed, and out in record time.

Japan's Quick Apology 'Closes' Bombing Incident

was damaged slightly when a flight of 26 Japanese warplanes, during Chungking's most severe air raid, dropped bombs near the boat and near the American Embassy. There were no casualties.

The Japanese claimed the incident was entirely accidental, Welles stated.

The Japanese government has further informed the United States, regarding concrete and detailed measures which it has taken to prevent a recurrence of such incidents, Welles continued.

Further, the Acting Secretary revealed that Japan offers to pay indemnities in full for any damage occasioned in the Tutuila case as soon as the necessary investigations have been completed.

Welles then said that the President had authorized him to declare that the United States regards the incident as closed.

Thus an official seal was placed on an international incident which, for almost a day, held possibilities of becoming as grave as the bombing of the Panay, sister ship of the Tutuila, December 12, 1937.

Apology More Rapid

The sinking of the Panay, which cost two American lives, also brought a full Japanese apology and indemnities of more than $2,000,000, but the apology was not tendered nearly so quickly as in the Tutuila incident.

At his noon press conference yesterday, Welles declared that he did not consider the preliminary apologies on the Tutuila incident to be satisfactory. He said that a more complete and formal apology was expected.

The regrets and offer to pay indemnities that Nomura brought to the State Department later evidently complied with Welles' demand.

The Japanese government was apparently doing its best to make quick amends for the incident, for Nomura told reporters, after seeing Welles, that "I am doing my best to iron out difficulties and maintain good relations between your country and mine."

The United States, on the other hand, was seen as taking the strongest possible stand toward Tokyo in order to impress the Japanese that this country "means business" in its joint efforts with Great Britain and the Netherlands to dissuade Nippon from further expansion in the South Pacific.

At his press conference, Welles indicated that, though the United States is permitting Japanese ships to enter and clear from American ports, the guns of economic warfare have not been spiked.

Welles said that Japanese vessels may discharge their cargoes in United States ports but that once discharged, the cargoes become "frozen" and can not be released except by special Treasury license.

Japanese Set For Action, Occupy Saigon

By the Associated Press

Saigon, French Indo-China, July 31.—A fully equipped Japanese army of crack troops, obviously ready for action and taking nothing for granted, formally occupied Saigon today and with smart precision took up strategic positions.

It was obvious to trained observers that Japan had sent a first-class army to occupy military bases in southern French Indo-China in accordance with the agreement between the Tokyo and Vichy governments.

In equipment, discipline and efficiency the military outfits sent here were recognized as among Japan's best. The Japanese army, navy and air force are working together and proceeding in a serious and business-like manner, apparently not taking it for granted there would be no opposition.

The Japanese are not depending upon local food, housing and transportation. They brought their own motor trucks, gasoline, foodstuffs, tents and a wide variety of other equipment.

A Japanese destroyer is berthed 50 yards from the Majestic Hotel, where Japanese army officers are maintaining their headquarters.

The commander of the Japanese air force in Indo-China is expected shortly with the first squadron of bombers.

The private and business life of Americans and Britons so far has remained unaffected.

French Diplomatic Service Is Reshuffled

Copyright by New York Times

Vichy, July 31.—A comprehensive reshuffle in the French diplomatic and consular service, affecting principally the lower rank officials and staff positions, was announced officially today. A large part of the foreign service officials will be sent into foreign countries, and those who have been aboard will be brought back to get in contact with the new ideas.

Most D. C. 'Gas' Sellers Favor Night Closing

"and I am certain my association will indorse the proposal."

He said the executive committee of the local dealers' group probably would meet this morning to discuss the matter.

Maj. Beverly C. Snow, Assistant Engineer Commissioner and chairman of the District Petroleum Conservation Committee, said last night he would meet tomorrow at 10 a. m. with local defense executives and recommend adoption of the night closing plan here the next day.

This is in line with Ickes' proposal that the 7 to 7 closing hours become effective in 12 Atlantic States, the District and parts of five others on August 3.

Capt. H. C. Whitehurst, director of highways and local defense chief, was asked what effect the shutdown might have on his 44 million dollar street improvement program in view of current Congressional activity to finance the gigantic project through increased gasoline taxes.

"We are going along with defense," said Whitehurst, "if we never get a highway program."

Although it was apparent last night that most local gasoline dealers would cooperate, spokesmen for some of the larger concerns—Gulf, Standard, American, etc.—said they had not as yet received instructions from their home offices and would take no action until orders are official.

Ickes, in proposing the closing plan, said it was "plainly evident" that the voluntary conservation program has been a failure.

"Closing public filling stations at night," he said, "is the least action we can take now and be realistic about our situation today."

Ickes said he hoped mandatory gasoline rationing "would not be necessary," adding: "However, mandatory rationing is not ruled out."

Ickes again stressed the threatened shortage of gas and oil products due to loss of tanker service to portions of the Atlantic seaboard.

States to come under the night closing plan are Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Connecticut, Rhode Island, New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, the peninsula of Florida and all marketing areas in or east of the Appalachian Mountains in New York, Virginia, Pennsylvania and West Virginia.

Ickes told a press conference that he was certain that the oil industry would effectively prevent violations by refusing to sell supplies to "bootleggers."

Noting that the "blackout" idea was first recommended by the East Coast oil marketers, Ickes said that in his conservation campaign he had "never seen such cooperation in my life" as that from the marketing committee in District No. 1, the area affected by the current oil shortage.

Asked about possible "blind pigs," Ickes noted that "you can't make gasoline in a bathtub."

Questioned on the effectiveness of his recommendation as a means of conserving gasoline, in view of the probability that motorists would stock up before the 7 o'clock shutdown, Ickes explained that the major purpose of the move was to "emphasize the seriousness" of the shortage.

The move, together with his previous requests that motorists save one-third of their normal consumption, Ickes added, should substantially reduce gasoline use.

The suggestion allowed for the fueling of commercial vehicles which operate exclusively after the 7 p. m. deadline, and also lifted the ban on sales to any vehicle "in the event of an emergency involving public health or safety."

Ickes admitted that the Government had no enforcement powers but pointed to his suggestion that suppliers refuse to make further deliveries to stations "in the event of any continued and deliberate failure to observe this recommendation."

Asked about the effect of the program on displacing filling station labor, Ickes said his mail indicated service operators favored the move as a means to curb expenses.

Ickes also said that filling stations operators had complained of a shortage of labor, due to demands of defense industries seeking men "handy with tools," and declared that he thought no serious unemployment problems would result from the nighttime sales stoppage.

Ickes said his plea for a one-third cut in consumption still held, and pointedly remarked that "unless this first action achieves results it must be followed by other steps to accomplish our ends."

Meantime, a step forward was taken yesterday on a more permanent measure to remedy the Atlantic Coast petroleum shortage, deriving from recent transfers to the British of more than half the Gulf Coast-East Coast tanker fleet. President Roosevelt signed a bill authorizing Federal construction of pipelines into the critical area and permitting private firms building the lines to condemn rights of way under the right of eminent domain.

The pipelines are not expected to relieve the shortage, however, until next spring.

King and Queen Watch U. S. Tanks in Mock War

Copyright by New York Tribune, Inc.

London, July 31.—King George and Queen Elizabeth saw the British army using American-made light tanks in a mimic battle against a squadron of Spitfire planes somewhere in the south of England today.

They saw the Spitfires dive at speeds of well over 300 miles an hour to within a few feet of the ground to check the overland charge of the tanks.

that the extension bill is "so loosely drawn" that the citizen-soldiers could be kept in uniform "for life."

He termed the measure a "blank check" and an "absolute betrayal by Congress and the Government of assurances given these men at the time they were drafted." The latter reference was to the provision of the original Selective Service Act fixing the period of service at one year unless Congress were to find the Nation in peril.

Senator Downey (Democrat), of California, urged the adoption of an amendment providing a bonus of $30 for each month the men are required to serve beyond a year. He said that if two million men are held two years, the cost would be about $1,440,000,000.

Wheeler backed his proposal, declaring that "if this country can afford to give money to Russia, China, South America and every other country on the face of the earth, then certainly we can afford to pay the American boy a decent compensation."

Meanwhile, support was said to be growing for a substitute proposal offered by Senator Taft (Republican), of Ohio, which would limit the service of selectees to 18 months and Guardsmen and Reserves to two years. Opponents probably will concentrate their fire on such a compromise, but Administration leaders declare they have the votes to beat it handily.

Both off and on the floor there was talk of a mandatory provision for the discharge of selectees who are 28 years old or more. Senate and House conferees on separate legislation which would exempt all such older registrants not now in service, were reported to be discussing broadening the provision to direct the discharge of the older men in uniform.

Senator Wheeler said that he imagined Congress "under the lash" would approve the service extension bill, but urged that instead "something" be worked out which will not be looked upon as a "betrayal of faith."

for the year ended June 30, 1941, with the executive given authority to make adjustments for speculative influences, changing transportation charges and other factors.

Authorize the President to name defense rental areas in which he could order reductions or, if necessary, establish general rent ceilings.

Prevent fixing of ceilings on prices of cotton, wheat, corn, tobacco or rice at less than "parity"—the figure based on the purchasing power derived from sale of agricultural products in the base period of 1910-14.

Permit buyers who find they have paid more than ceiling prices to sue for $50 damages or three times the excess amount. The Government may bring suit if the purchaser fails to do so within six months.

Impose a $5,000 fine, or a year's imprisonment, or both, in addition to damages, on manufacturers, retailers or landlords violating ceiling orders.

Set up a special three-judge court to rule on price order appeals denied by the President, with the court's decisions subject to review by the Supreme Court.

The President yesterday conferred on the price control bill with Henderson and Marriner S. Eccles, chairman of the Federal Reserve Board.

"We discussed everything on the inflation front," Eccles told reporters.

Five Selectees Guests Of Arlington Rotary

Five selectees, who will be inducted into service today, were guests of the Arlington Rotary Club at a luncheon yesterday in the Washington Golf and Country Club.

They were Alvin Gantt, Mark Parker, Thomas Shelton, Richard Kellams, and Joseph Healey. State Senator William D. Medley and Mrs. Louise Green, chairman of the county selective service committee, were the speakers.

many merits as defects to county employes.

It was termed a "good measure" by C. L. Kinnier, Arlington County Engineer, who said that employes of the engineering force and road department would work "much better" by being able to start work one hour earlier when it is cooler.

C. J. Ralston, vice president and general manager of the Arlington-Fairfax Motor Transport Co., declared: "It's too late in the year to start daylight saving. Unless it becomes effective in the District it will materially affect bus transportation schedules."

He pointed out that 65 per cent of the company's trade entailed Washington traffic, and that an entire new schedule would have to be installed to cope with the change.

Fairfax County officials declared that if the act were in force in winter schools would have to start at 10 a. m. instead of 9 a. m. due to the fact that children could not be expected to rise in the dark in order to get to school.

Roy C. Cable, secretary of the Fairfax County Chamber of Commerce, termed the proposal "an outrage." He said: "If anyone wants to get up early, it isn't necessary to have daylight saving. It is one of the worst things that can happen to the farmers—the backbone of the country."

Cable pointed out that the dew is not off the grass until the sun has been out a couple of hours and that the plan can benefit the farmer in no way.

R. M. Loughborough, purchasing agent for Fairfax County, said, "It will be of advantage to us in this county only if Washington has it."

Pepper Assails Clark's Plan To 'Take Over' the Americas

Senator Pepper (Democrat), of Florida, pattered with blunt words yesterday at Senator Clark's (Democrat), of Idaho, suggestion that the United States "take over control" of Canada and all Latin America, possibly through establishment of puppet governments.

"There could have been no better news for Mr. Goebbels than Senator Clark's statement," declared the Floridian, a down-the-line supporter of President Roosevelt's foreign policies.

"Even that Nazi master of propaganda could not have performed a more useful service for Germany in this hemisphere."

Senator Connally (Democrat), of Texas, newly designated chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, dismissed Clark's proposal with one word: "Horsefeathers."

However, Senator Johnson (Republican), of California, told reporters that he thought Clark had made "a perfectly legitimate suggestion" which did "not warrant the attack made against him."

Cable—Copyright New York Times

Bogota, Colombia, July 31.—The charges by Senator Clark, of Idaho, are printed by the local press without editorial comment, which would seem to indicate how seriously they are considered. The general reaction is that, while the statement is absurd, it is also unfortunate and inopportune.

Cable—Copyright New York Times

San Jose, Costa Rica, July 31.—Only the Diario de Costa Rica published the charges of Senator D. Worth Clark, of Idaho, along with President Roosevelt's declaration expressing the hope that no country would take it seriously. No editorial comment was considered necessary, because the government and people of Costa Rica have complete confidence in the sincerity of Mr. Roosevelt's policies.

Tegucigalpa, Honduras, July 31.—The statement by Senator Clark, of Idaho, who is unknown here, raises the question of what authority he uses for his charge that the good-neighbor policy in Latin America has failed. The people of Honduras generally accepted the opinion of President Tiburcio Carias Andino, who recently said to the press:

"Latin Americans are indebted to President Roosevelt for his good-neighbor policy. The benefits of this policy to the continent have been enormous in bringing the people closer together, erasing old resentments and creating an atmosphere of understanding and justice."

Draft Property Bill Approved By House Unit

The draft property bill, carrying Senate limitations on the President's requisitioning authority, was approved yesterday by a 18-4 vote of the House Military Affairs Committee and headed down the last lap to enactment.

Action came after Undersecretary of War Patterson told the committee the legislation is essential to equip soldiers now in the field and applies to private property the principle already extended by Selective Service to man power.

Patterson said the authority in the bill will help to deal with some second-hand dealers who ask exorbitant prices for used machine tools. He said he had no complaint against industry in general but the authority would help cope with the small percentage which "does not go along."

As limited by the Senate and approved by the House committee, the bill empowers the President to requisition military or naval equipment, supplies or munitions or machinery and tools essential to their manufacture and servicing.

Two amendments were added by the House committee. One provides that the price paid for requisitioned materials be confined to their fair market value without allowance for prospective profits or damages. The other said the legislation shall not be construed as authorizing requisitioning of firearms possessed for personal protection or for sport, or requiring registration of such arms. It provided against infringement of the right to keep or bear arms.

Chicago, July 31 (AP).—They held a wake today for two of the Loop's landmarks. The corpses were the Auditorium Theater and the Auditorium Hotel.

Scene of the obsequies was the tap room in the inn, where grizzled patrons of many years' standing crowded the 60-foot bar, elbow to elbow, and recalled the glories of the past over beakers of cold beverages.

In this emergency it's everybody's business to save gasoline!

[Here is the letter which has gone to all of The Texas Company organization in the Eastern Seaboard States... where a gasoline shortage is imminent]

THE TEXAS COMPANY
135 EAST 42nd STREET
NEW YORK

July 29, 1941

W. S. S. RODGERS
PRESIDENT

TO ALL TEXACO EMPLOYES:

On behalf of National Defense, the oil industry has released a substantial portion of its American flag tanker tonnage, and will probably release more within a short time.

Such a large withdrawal of transportation facilities has made it impossible for the Oil Industry to deliver enough petroleum products to the Eastern Seaboard States to satisfy present demands. A shortage impends.

Petroleum Coordinator Harold L. Ickes has urged a reduction of one-third of the current gasoline consumption. He has asked for a voluntary saving, but he has indicated the situation is so serious that rationing must be used if voluntary efforts fail.

Your Company has released its proportion of tankers. We are cooperating to the fullest with our government in every way to help the National Defense.

This letter is to ask your individual cooperation in two ways:

First, as a motorist, please reduce your gasoline consumption one-third immediately.

Second, as an employe of this Company, see to it that everything possible is done to save gasoline—

(a) Plan truck routes to prevent too frequent deliveries or unnecessary driving.

(b) All Salesmen should re-check their route sheets to avoid needless driving.

(c) Keep equipment at top efficiency. Keep carburetor and spark controls at correct adjustment. Keep tires properly inflated.

(d) Drive slower. Driving at high speed greatly increases fuel consumption.

The public naturally looks to the Oil Industry to provide leadership in this campaign to save gasoline.

I ask your complete cooperation, both as a motorist and as an employe.

Your contribution will be helpful to your Company and your Country...—

Yours very truly,

PRESIDENT

Help the nation by saving gasoline in the simple ways outlined above

House to End Debate Today On Defense Tax

The House today will complete general debate on the $3,520,200,000 defense tax bill and then return Monday for three crucial votes.

Leaders said they will order a weekend recess before voting on the controversial joint return feature. Only two major votes will follow, on a Republican motion to recommit and on final passage of the bill.

Listless debate marked the second day of talk on the measure, with seldom more than 20 to 25 members on the floor. With approval assured for virtually every tax provision save the joint-return requirement, debate continued to center on that issue.

Representative Buck (Democrat), of California, who will move to strike joint returns from the bill, and Representative Dewey (Republican), of Illinois, former Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, led the attack on husband-wife filings. Dewey charged joint returns were an indirect method of reducing the $2,000 exemption allowed each married couple. Committee leaders replied the change would remove "inequities" now favoring community property States and upper bracket married couples.

In a plea for approval of the bill without change, Representative Robertson (Democrat), of Virginia, defended particularly corporate surtax and excess profits tax sections, terming these the "soundest, most carefully prepared provisions of this bill." He said the committee's optional method of computing excess profits taxes was "fairer" than the Treasury's invested capital plan.

Representatives Knutson, of Minnesota, and Crowther, of New York, Republican Ways and Means committeemen, predicted the national debt will reach 100 billion dollars before the defense program is through and called for nondefense spending cuts and an end to "New Deal prodigality and waste." Knutson said the tax bill itself was "not bad."

To Republican demands for cuts in spending before taxes are boosted, Representative Cooper (Democrat), of Tennessee, replied that the place to discuss economy was during House consideration of bills authorizing appropriations.

Tax Anticipation Notes Go on Sale Today

Henry Morgenthal, jr., Secretary of the Treasury, announced last night that the new tax anticipation notes, designed to ease the taxpayers' burden in meeting next year's tax bill, the largest in the Nation's history, will go on sale this morning at the 12 Federal Reserve Banks throughout the country.

For the first time in the history of the Treasury, taxpayers are being given a return on their money if they pay their taxes in advance, Morgenthau said the reserve banks will offer for sale two series of tax notes.

Rayburn Holds Hope of House Recess by Aug. 15

Members of the House, half way through the tax bill and a bit grouchy, yesterday started up talk on vacation again.

Speaker Rayburn held out possibility of a House recess around August 15, if the chamber clears its dockets of committee-approved measures by that time.

While the Senate works on the tax bill, and the House Banking Committee considers price control legislation, Rayburn indicated the House might take some time out. But first it must act on the tax bill, due for a vote Monday, the Selective Service extension, to be called up the following day, and the modified draft property bill.

Animal Rescue League Placed On Tax Roll With Y. W. Home

Properties valued at nearly $270,000, owned or controlled by religious and charitable organizations, yesterday were ordered removed from tax-exempt rolls by the Commissioners.

Two of the most important holdings ordered to the taxable lists are quarters of the Animal Rescue League, Inc., 71 O Street Northwest, and the Young Women's Christian Association Home, 235 Second Street Northeast.

The Animal Rescue League property is assessed at $23,346. In recommending its return to tax rolls, the Real Estate Tax Board reported:

"Your committee is of the opinion that the Washington Animal Rescue League is engaged in a very humane work, but does not believe that our present exemption laws were designed to exempt from real estate taxes institutions of this character."

Is Aided by Chest

The Rescue League, created as a haven for sick and disabled animals, is maintained through Community Chest contributions and an income from an endowment fund. It operates two ambulances and provides a service for finding homes for friendless animals.

The Y. W. C. A. home will pay taxes on an assessed property value of $168,401. It was exempted in 1887 under a special act of Congress and has been used to house young women stranded in the city.

"We find," said the exemption board, "that the home is being used for women up to 44 years of age, who are employed and are receiving salaries up to $1,260 a year.

"We also are advised," the board told the Commissioners, "that instead of being temporary, that girls can remain during good behavior or until such time as they are transferred or their salaries are raised above the limit of $1,260. The board does not feel that this home is being operated in accordance with provisions of the exemption law."

Yield $3,000 Taxes

The Animal Rescue League property will yield an annual tax bill of $480 and the Y. W. C. A. holdings $2,947.

Other properties ordered taxable include holdings of the Second Church of Christ Scientist at First and C Streets Northeast valued at $45,528 and a building on Wisconsin Avenue Northwest near Thirty-first Street, owned by the Washington Cathedral Foundation and valued at $25,545.

Numerous smaller properties which have yet to be assessed also were ordered restored to tax lists.

OPM Acting To Taper Off Silk for Hose

By the Associated Press

A priorities order is in preparation which will curb substantially, if not completely, the flow of raw silk into hosiery mills and other civilian manufacture, Office of Production Management officials said yesterday.

The order, expected within a short time, will probably provide for a deep initial cut in silk consumption, followed by gradually diminishing allocations to mills until the civilian use of the imported fiber is virtually halted, it was said, in order to conserve existing stocks for military purposes.

Concern for the 175,000 employes in the silk industry, who would be thrown out of jobs if mills were abruptly ordered to cease operations entirely, is a principal factor behind the plan for the gradual diminution of civilian allocations, an OPM priorities division official said.

While military demands are not heavy, defense leaders were said to feel that the small quantity of silk stocks in the country and the prospect of complete cessation of imports from Japan owing to the Far Eastern crisis make a conservation program necessary.

Mill Employing 600 Forced to Close

Philadelphia, July 31 (AP).—Lack of silk and other material forced the closing today of the Courtland Mill of the Gotham Silk Hosiery Co., Inc., which employes approximately 600 workers.

Another of the company's knitting mills here employing about 1,800 will have to curtail production within a few days if the shortage of material continues, William K. Leader, of the C. I. O. American Federation of Hosiery Workers said he had been advised by Samuel F. Rubin, assistant to the president of the firm.

Nazis Can Be Beaten by '43, Expert Holds

Copyright by New York Times

The United States should make a choice now between a decision to help defeat Germany by a long war, lasting probably five years, or a decision to try to overwhelm the Nazis by means of a short war to be brought to a victorious conclusion by the end of 1943, in the opinion of Louis Marlio, economist, expressed in a booklet issued here yesterday by the Brookings Institution.

Marlio's conclusions are the result of seven months' survey of American factories and shipyards. Marlio was general manager of the French Aluminum Co. from 1918 to 1939, and for 12 years chairman of the International Aluminum Cartel.

"A Short War Through American Industrial Superiority," is the title of the booklet. The author declared that the industrial advantages of the United States are far greater than most Americans realize, and are sufficient to provide planes, tanks and other materials for mechanized warfare on a scale that cannot be matched by Germany.

Already, Marlio wrote, Germany is at the peak of her possible industrial output, and American output by the end of this year will outstrip Germany's. He said that raw materials, oil, transportation, power facilities, and trained men are lacking in Germany for expansion to meet American production. With a work week of from 60 to 70 hours, already in effect, Germany would encounter a serious labor bottleneck, Marlio said, even with the populations of conquered countries to draw upon.

Marlio believes that if the United States decides to gear production to the policy of trying to end the war victoriously by the end of 1943, its efforts should be centered upon limited but decisive factors of production, as follows:

The Navy should concentrate on the quickest possible completion of big battleships already upon the ways, and upon the construction of great quantities of destroyers, submarines, light cruisers and airplane carriers.

American shipyards should "rush to the limit" the building of fast and simple types of merchant ships.

The aviation program should be tripled or quadrupled, and should concentrate on the building of bombers, especially big bombers with a large range of action.

In the shortest possible time we should expand to the maximum the fabrication of tanks, "especially tanks of giant size."

On the ordnance side, efforts should be concetrated on the production of antiaircraft and antitank guns.

"Such an effort," wrote Marlio, "would prove decisive only if public opinion were convinced that in a short time the sacrifices made by the whole population would insure an early victory and a future of promise."

New Economic Defense Council Is Named

Brookings Graduate School, Riefler gained experience first as a Latin-American foreign trade officer of the Commerce Department, and later, as director of research and statistics of the Federal Reserve Board.

From 1933 to 1935 he was chairman of the Central Statistical Board and economic adviser to the Executive Council and its successor, the National Emergency Council. Although classed as a conservative economist, he was "brain trust" and "Little Cabinet" adviser.

The Economic Defense Board, whose creation has been forecast for many months but was blocked partly by interdepartmental rivalry and partly by disagreement on proper economic action toward Japan and Russia, has been characterized by its proponents as "potentially worth more for beating Hitler than an army of a million men."

Although the board's powers and functions were described only in general terms, it was learned from reliable sources that its duties would be the coordinating of a far-reaching program including:

1. "Preclusive" or "preemptive" buying, by which the United States buys up defensive goods to prevent their shipment to Axis or Axis-controlled countries;

2. Preclusive selling, whereby United States firms would sell to Latin-American countries goods that might otherwise come from the Axis sphere, and thus prevent the setting up of Axis-controlled credits;

3. Economic observation, to keep a much closer watch on the business ventures of Germany, Japan and Italy in the Western Hemisphere;

4. Handling the frozen assets of Axis powers here and cooperating with Latin-American nations in freezing credits in South America;

5. Further action to hog-tie the trade of the 1,800 Latin-American firms, blacklisted by the State Department as being Axis-controlled, and to set up American firms to compete with them and drive them out of operations.

In his executive order, the President defined the term "economic defense" as:

"The conduct, in the interest of national defense, of international economic activities, including those relating to exports, imports, the acquisition and disposition of materials and commodities from foreign countries, including preclusive buying transactions in foreign exchange and foreign-owned or foreign-controlled property, international investments and extensions of credit, shipping and transportation of good among countries, the international aspect of patents, international communications pertaining to commerce, and other foreign economic matters."

Officials forecast that the board would work closely with the British Ministry of Economic Warfare, where cooperation was considered particularly valuable in the fields of communication, shipping news and transportation.

The appointment of Wallace as chairman of the board was seen as a device to end a conflict of many months between a series of agencies—State, Treasury, Commerce, the Export Control Office, OPM, OPACS—each anxious to head up what was recognized as one of the most important defense functions.

Power Rests With Agencies

Wallace has long been a principal Administration adviser on international economic questions and has continued to take a major share in the work even since his election as vice president. Interested in Latin-American relations, he was sent last winter as President Roosevelt's representative at the inauguration of President Avila Comacho of Mexico.

Although the board does not appear to have direct powers to enforce its decisions, it was assumed that the agencies represented on the inter-Cabinet group would carry out the orders. It was noted that the heads of almost all the Government agencies which have direct powers in the foreign economic field are represented on the board.

In addition, the President ordered that some 20 other Government agencies connected with defense and the national economy appoint liaison officers to cooperate with the central body.

The President's order listed five general functions of the board:

1. To advise the President on all measures to be taken for improving economic defense;

2. To coordinate policies and work of all departments and agencies carrying on activities related to economic defense;

3. To develop integrated economic defense programs for coordinated action by the numerous defense agencies;

4. To investigate and advise the President on the relationship of economic defense measures to post-war economic reconstruction;

5. To review all legislation related to economic defense, and to recommend such additional legislation that may be necessary.

Just as Predicted In the Federal Diary

The following appeared June 19 in the Federal Diary, Jerry Kluttz's column in The Post:

President Roosevelt may break another precedent by making Henry A. Wallace a working Vice President. There's no law that prevents the Vice President from working and Wallace is understood to be the President's compromise choice to head the proposed new agency of economic warfare unless the departments concerned can agree on one person and how the agency should be operated. A scrap has been fought for weeks over the makeup of the agency and who shall head it. Jessie Jones is back of Will Clayton for the job. Treasury Secretary Morgenthau is understood to be behind Herbert Gaston and Dean Acheson is ably supported by Secretary Hull.

Defense Takes Gilt Off Polo And Racing

By Inez Robb
International News Service Staff Writer

New York, July 31.—By tradition, horse racing and polo are the sports of financial kings. But today, the kings are in the counting house, counting out their money more carefully than ever before.

Gone and all but forgotten are the days when men paid a fortune for a polo pony or an untried, unpredictable yearling at the annual summer sales at the Saratoga race track.

A decade ago, the late John Sanford, a gentleman and millionaire of the old school, paid $22,500 for an Argentine polo pony. Only a few weeks ago, one of the best polo stables in the country was sold at auction. Charles D. Wrightsman, Texas oil millionaire, after a long career in polo, turned over his stable to the United Service Organization. The U. S. O. auctioned off 13 sleek, fleet ponies for an average price of $580.

There is neither the money nor the demand for race or polo ponies.

Several of the key figures in high goal circles have already swapped polo for pup-tents, and others will soon be going to camp. Raymond Guest, hung up his polo mallets a year ago and is now in the United States Navy. John (Jack) Milburn, son of probably the greatest polo player of all time, Devereux Milburn, has enlisted in the Aviation Corps. James P. (Jimmy) Mills, outstanding among the younger polo generation, is also in the aviation service.

Robert (Bobby) Gerry, one of the four polo-playing Gerry brothers, has given up polo to devote his spare time to club work for underprivileged boys.

Horse-racing has ceased to be a gentleman's pastime and a plaything of the rich and ritzy. Horse-racing has become big business in the United States, a big business in which society takes part but which it no longer controls as absolutely as in the past.

At the Saratoga yearling sales in August, 1938, the Eastland Farms Stable paid $75,000 for a colt named New Broom. In the previous summer, W. R. Coe, Wall Street financier, had spent $70,000 on a colt called Hustle On.

Grace Predicts Drive for Scrap Like Aluminum

By the Associated Press

New York, July 31.—E. G. Grace, president of Bethlehem Steel Corporation, predicted today that an iron and steel scrap drive, similar to the aluminum drive might be instituted throughout the United States in order to keep the steel industry operating for defense.

Grace described the present scrap shortage as "extremely serious."

"We are operating on a hand-to-mouth basis right now," he said after pointing out that the Bethlehem Corporation had turned out steel for the last 12 months at 100 per cent of its capacity.

"Frankly," he said, "there is not a bit of use of this Nation building more steel furnaces until we get more scrap metal."

The steelmaker disclosed that discussions already were under way with the British toward a goal of cutting off scrap shipments, the Americans holding that it would be a greater benefit to the British to send over finished steel products.

Again referring to American capacities, Grace said: "The capacity of this country to make steel already is about double that of Germany."

He said the main reason for the present acute shortage of scrap, which, with pig iron, compose the basic raw material of steel, was brought about largely through heavy exports of recent years. Although Grace mentioned no countries, Japan has in recent years been the largest customer of the American discarded metal.

Job For Mr. Wallace

There is a story that an old man was once asked what had become of his two sons. "Well," he said, "one went to sea, and the other became Vice President, and neither has since been heard from." It was assumed when Mr. Wallace became Vice President that he would exercise extremely important as well as ornamental functions in Mr. Roosevelt's third Administration. The supposition was that he might become a sort of Ambassador-at-Large to the Latin-American Republics.

Mr. Wallace, in fact, gave color to the report by going on a special mission to Mexico. But the niche which he has been asked to fill in the emergency is something different. He will head up a new economic defense board which will direct economic warfare on the Axis. We have been slow in lining up with the British on economic warfare, and the new board may now be expected to make up for lost time in a department which may play as big a part in completing what Mr. Sumner Welles calls the "final and utter destruction of Hitlerism" as any.

Lesson In Cotton

When Congress set out to boost the prices of farm products by means of mandatory 85-per-cent-of-parity loans, professional optimists managed to extract some comfort from the thought of the huge surpluses held by the Government. The reasoning was that if cotton prices should threaten to get out of hand, the Government could easily bring them within bounds by releasing some of its stored cotton for sale. But the optimists failed to reckon with the resourceful Congressional farm bloc. With cotton prices advancing by leaps and bounds to the highest levels attained in eleven years, officials of the Commodity Credit Corporation intimated quite recently that this might be a good time to dispose of some of the Government's cotton stocks. The announcement, of course, was followed by an immediate break in cotton prices, but not for long.

What happened? We don't know what went on behind the scenes, but you can make your own guess from the fact that the CCC hastily announced it had decided not to sell any cotton. So the market resumed its interrupted advance.

Now the Senate cotton bloc, having suffered this shock, decided to take no chances on a future change of mind on the part of the CCC. Senator (Cotton Ed) Smith's bill for freezing all cotton in Government loan stocks—a proposal previously passed by the Senate—was attached as a rider to a House bill relating to wheat marketing quotas. The Senate has just passed that much-amended measure and sent it to conference. Whether the bill is finally enacted or not, the CCC has received a jolt that will doubtless make it very hesitant to intervene again, no matter how far above parity cotton prices may soar.

This is all very educative in more senses than one. If the corrective price mechanism of the CCC should be made impotent by legislative prohibitions upon sales of stored farm products, what becomes of the argument that price control does not have to be applied to farm products because there is no danger of inflation with supplies on hand more than adequate to meet demand? Perhaps Senator Smith or Senator Bankhead knows the answer to that question, but it is extremely puzzling to anybody not exposed to the inverted economic theorizing of the farm bloc.

Swiss Anniversary

Switzerland is the paradox among nations. It has within itself all those elements which in the usual experience of history make for disunity and internal tension. That is to say, it has sharp divisions as to religion, language, local culture and even literature. In a sense, indeed, Switzerland is not one but 22 nations, for the cantons, like our own States, are sovereign. Yet there is probably no people upon the globe in whom the sense of national unity is stronger. And throughout 650 years of incessant European wars, revolutions and religious upheavals Switzerland has preserved its freedom and integrity, except for the brief interval of the Napoleonic occupation. Today Switzerland remains a bright island of peace and liberty in a continent which is one vast dark sea of war and slavery.

This week the Swiss at home and abroad celebrate the anniversary of their nation. Like the briefer history of the United States, the history of Switzerland offers an interesting study in the problem of federalism and centralization. The economic changes of the nineteenth century brought strong centralizing tendencies even in Switzerland. But in contrast to the United States these were achieved without great sacrifice of local patriotisms and particularisms. Perhaps, then, the reorganization of Europe on something like the Swiss model may be the answer to the condition which has existed on that continent since the sixteenth century—the problem that almost every generation from Westphalia to Versailles has sought in vain to solve.

Robbing Peter

In a very real sense it is a national calamity that defense officials have been only moderately successful in dispelling the traditional concept of business as usual. That you cannot superimpose an all-out industrial war effort upon a peacetime economy is so apparent and has been emphasized so often that reiteration now ought not to be necessary. But it is, and The Post will continue to speak out when specific evidence of abortive and unintelligent defense planning comes to its attention.

A prime example of unintelligent defense planning is tucked away in the gigantic construction program now under way. As of July 1 authorized expenditures for defense construction of all kinds were $5,783,232,000. Assume for the moment that all this construction is absolutely necessary—a debatable assumption, at best. It takes no master mind to appreciate the consequent and truly phenomenal drain on the country's resources of labor and of materials. Nor should it come as a surprise that the completion of even a major part of the construction program should call for a sparing use of certain materials, particularly metals. This, however, is not the case. The plain truth of the matter is that building activity is now consuming steel, copper, zinc, and to a lesser degree, brass and tin, at too rapid a rate. Actually the defense program may go on the rocks unless an immediate effort is made to cut down on the construction use of these metals.

The OPM is, of course, doing its best to conserve these metals. It knows that in a couple of more months at the outside there will have to be a strict clamping down on their use. It also knows that in order to forestall serious shortages later, the intelligent thing to do is to convince builders and their suppliers now that they ought to use less metal. Or, failing that, the OPM knows equally that the sensible alternative is immediate rationing. Apparently, however, OPM action is being consistently hindered by pressure from builders and suppliers who may or may not acknowledge the impending crisis but who almost uniformly refuse to exert sufficient imagination to figure out other materials to be used in place of metals. In other words, they have become accustomed to using metal for certain construction purposes, and for reasons best known to themselves insist that their present use of metal is essential.

Some metal naturally has to be used and in many cases substitutes for metal would not be as satisfactory. But defense construction is an emergency measure, requiring emergency treatment, as should be clear from the foregoing evidence. Take, for example, one aspect of the building program, defense housing—for which $635,000,000 has been authorized. It has been estimated that in the average $3,000-$4,000 house financed through the FHA there is approximately 4,000 pounds of steel, 2,000 of which can be dispensed with by using appropriate substitutes. Similarly, of the copper in such a house—142 pounds—only about one-quarter is deemed essential by impartial production experts. And they claim that of the 77 pounds of zinc now going into this house, perhaps only 7 pounds are vitally needed. As of July 1, there was still to be spent for defense housing $517,720,000 of the authorized $635,000,000. Multiply even a part of the potential savings in metal indicated above by the thousands of defense housing units still to be built, and the result is, of course, a let-up in the pressure on our metal reserves. Extend the saving, where possible, to defense construction of other kinds—military housing, Government and privately financed plant expansion, and so on—and our future metal shortage might prove far less threatening than is now the case.

The situation requires not only more willing cooperation on the part of builders and suppliers. It requires plenty of ingenuity. The metal shortage is nothing more or less than a production "bug" which has to be straightened out just as other "bugs" have been. Traditionally Americans have a special genius for surmounting industrial obstacles, and the construction industry is perfectly capable of carrying on the tradition. If it persists in recommending and using substantially the same amounts of construction metal—business as usual—then the OPM should stop passing the buck, as it has been doing, and crack down at once with a strict rationing system. Anything less, under the defense circumstances, would be robbing Peter to pay Paul.

George And Connally

Criticism often has been heaped on the seniority rule by which the chairmen of senatorial committees are chosen. And it has been justifiable. Too often the seniority rule brings misfits to the heads of committees handling legislation of the greatest importance. A case in point is the recent elevation of Senator Reynolds to the chairmanship of the Senate Military Affairs Committee only because he had been a member of that group longer than any other Democratic Senator. But the shift which has placed Senator George at the head of the Finance Committee and brought Senator Connally to the chairmanship of the Foreign Relations Committee is ample evidence that the seniority rule does not always operate to the disadvantage of sound legislation.

The fact is that, despite its many shortcomings, the seniority rule has at least two virtues. It prevents free-for-all scrambles when chairmanships become vacant, and it usually elevates men of long legislative experience to the most powerful positions in Congress. Unfortunately, however, experience does not always give legislators sound judgment, and it may contribute little to other qualifications which the chairmen of standing committees in the Senate ought to have. Still it does help to give continuity to national policies and stability to our legislative system, and these advantages are not to be minimized in times like the present.

Moreover, there is always the problem of Executive-Congress relations to bear in mind. These must be kept smooth in time of national and international crisis when the national strength must be exerted. As head of the Foreign Relations Committee Senator George cooperated with the Administration in the enactment of all essential measures, though without relinquishing his watchful attitude toward the extension of executive powers. Senator Connally is a more ardent sponsor of the President's foreign policy. While he is not as careful a student of either international or domestic affairs as is his predecessor, he will undoubtedly be a tower of strength in meeting the momentous issues of foreign policy that are likely to crowd in upon Congress in the next few months.

Mr. George on his part will be entirely at home at the head of the big table in the Finance Committee room—probably more at home than he was in the Foreign Relations chairmanship. His primary interests appear to lie in domestic problems. As head of the Senate's most powerful committee, he has to face gigantic problems of taxation and finance, and he will have to watch over the readjustment of our economic system when the present crisis has passed. The country is fortunate, indeed, that a haphazard promotion system has brought two men of such capacity, training and integrity to two of the highest positions in the Senate in this emergency.

Resisting Congestion

The parking of automobiles is only incidental to the issue which has been laid before the House Subcommittee on Fiscal Affairs of the District by Capt. Whitehurst, director of highways, and Washington I. Cleveland, manager of the District Motor Club. The real issue is whether Washington is to become a closely built and congested city or is to preserve the characteristics which L'Enfant and the subsequent planners attempted to give it. At present the city is rapidly concentrating large buildings in its congested areas with little regard for the parking of automobiles for transporting persons living in or doing business in those buildings. If this haphazard growth continues without planning from the transportation angle, the Nation's Capital will soon be face to face with the dilemma of overcongestion that is plaguing so many other large American cities.

Two constructive means of resisting this trend are at hand. Capt. Whitehurst reports that the Commissioners have prepared a bill creating an agency to develop parking lots on the fringe of the business district. Mr. Cleveland has revived the sound proposal that parking facilities be required as part of any future building project in Washington. It is unpardonably short-sighted to go on crowding buildings, apartments and business structures into metropolitan areas where there is no place for tenants or customers to park. Past failure to accommodate the city to the automobile can be corrected only at heavy cost or the adoption of such expedients as fringe parking lots. While thus moving to correct past blunders, it would be incredibly stupid to ignore the future trouble inherent in the development of new congested areas without parking facilities.

THE HARVEST

Out of the narrow slip of earth,
Faded the furrow, reluctant in birth,
Grew somehow in wind and rain
The green blade tipped with yellow grain.
But in my mind a season grows
Colder than winter and the autumn rains.
And from that darkness there will come
Only a sullen root, a barren leaf
No flower and no golden sheaf
Can bloom where I have planted grief.

Federal Economy

Dismissing any thought of taking sides with Senator Wheeler, or with Secretary of War Stimson in the cat-and-dog fight which recently in the Senate aroused such valiant championship of the Montana orator, to one grown old and weary with watching the antics of some of our putative statesmen, it would seem that the most striking lesson to be derived from these much publicized outbursts has not been duly emphasized. I mean the waste of the taxpayers' money through the abuse of the franking privilege to frank one million post cards through the mails at a time when most of us are beginning to groan at the thought of the heavy burden put upon us by the wasteful extravagance of Washington during the course of years, to which has been added the new tax bill which next year will force back the standards of living for many of us to a point of depression lower than it has sunk in 40 years, is dismaying.

If the opposition in Congress—Republicans, Democrats, so-called Progressives or whatnot—wish to take steps to save the taxpayers' money, let them begin at home. Let them start by doing something about the franking privilege. It would be a gesture that would command immediate public attention and win applause now bestowed sometimes very conditionally.

Former Postmaster General James A. Farley found ways and means to increase the revenues of the Postoffice Department during his term of office which were worth while, but even Mr. Farley had no authority to tackle the franking privilege. That is something which is strictly up to Congress itself. It ought to get busy with what, outside of legislative halls, is a peculiarly vital matter to the American taxpayer.

The Canadian War Effort

Mrs. Charles Ed Russell wonders "how many of our people are aware of the amazing fact that up to now Canada has had only 30 days of compulsory military training; that overseas service is limited to voluntary enlistments, and that Canadian war materials are sold to England only for cash, no 'lend-lease' flim-flam." From these three statements—the first two correct, the third incorrect—Mrs. Russell attempts to show that Canada sees less danger in the present situation than our Administration would have us believe is the case. That we, in fact, are being "fed daily propaganda" to induce us to defend the British Empire.

Mrs. Russell's disregard of the facts concerning Canada's war effort leads one to suspect also her judgment on the perils facing this country. The following information is compiled from official releases of the director of public information in Ottawa.

Notwithstanding the liberality of her conscription laws, Canada has approximately 300,000 men now serving in the active armed forces at home and abroad. Of these, at least 80,000 are in England, where their equipment and upkeep, as in the case of Canadian forces in other advance bases of defense, are paid for in full by Canada. All 300,000 have been enlisted on a voluntary basis for the duration and will go wherever required. In terms of the population of the United States this is equivalent to an American armed strength of more than three million men.

The British Commonwealth air training plan, for which Canada is providing 80 per cent of the students, is estimated to cost $824,000,000 over three years. Of this amount Canada will supply $531,000,000.

Canada's contributions to the British war effort appear to be most often misquoted and misunderstood by some Americans. Since the outbreak of the war Canada has sent supplies in increasing quantities to Britain. Canadian exports to Great Britain in the 12 months ended March 31, 1941, were 45 per cent greater than in the 12 months ended March 31, 1940, and during the succeeding 12 months it is expected that Canada will export goods to Britain to the value of about $1,500,000,000, the equivalent of nearly 23 billion dollars' worth of goods in terms of American population and income. Beside this figure the relative effort represented by seven billion dollars of lend-lease looks small indeed, even supposing the impossible—that we translate this appropriation into guns, airplanes and ships for delivery within one year.

Canada has financed about three-quarters of Britain's deficit with Canada to date and will finance the bulk of her expenditures in Canada in the coming months. Apart from British goods sent to Canada, Britain has already needed a billion Canadian dollars to cover her purchases in Canada. About a quarter of this sum Britain paid Canada in gold. It has cost Canada more gold than this to enable her to fill her British orders from the United States. There have been no gold shipments from Britain to Canada since December, 1940.

Canada has told Britain not to worry about her shortage of Canadian money—that there will be time enough to reckon costs and credits when the war is over. Canada provides Great Britain with some of the Canadian money she needs by repatriating Canadian securities held in Britain. This amounts to paying debts before they are due. The Dominion supplies the rest by accumulating sterling balances—in effect, lending Great Britain money. All this credit, like the money raised to spend on Canada's own war effort, must be provided by the Canadian people. During the present fiscal year the total required for financial aid to Britain will be between 800 and 900 million dollars (equivalent to some nine billion dollars in the United States).

This can hardly be described as demanding cash for goods, as Mrs. Russell asserts. Canada and the United States are both, in effect, lending Great Britain the money to buy goods in their respective countries. In both cases the terms of repayment are to be decided later, when they can be determined to the best advantage by postwar conditions. If a comparison has to be made, on a purely quantitative basis, it is evident that of the two efforts Canada's is easily the greater.

One last point: In the present fiscal year Canada is spending 40 per cent of its total national income on defense and aid to Britain. During the same period the United States will be using, the Bureau of the Budget estimates, only 15 to 20 per cent of its national income for the same purposes, at the most. We have a long way to go before we can claim to be doing as much for the cause of freedom as our northern neighbor.

General Store

The Prince Frederick Department Store went up in flames at midnight and is now only a smoldering mass of ruins. This was more than a store, it was the meeting place for the peninsula between the Patuxent River and Chesapeake Bay. A sprawling friendly old frame structure much larger than a store, more like a community center.

A vice president of Sears Roebuck remarked that it carried many things that could not be bought at any city store or mail order house. What the community needed, whether clothing or shoes, drugs or hardware, was on sale. Harness for work horses, saddles for riding, stoves for wood and gear for fishing, candy for the kids and cracker barrels for sociability.

The proprietor, Mr. Louis Goldstein, presided over the three floors of farm comforts and necessaries like a kindly squire. Many of the customers were tenants of his farms, all were his friends. If they came with money they were no more welcome than when he told them "you don't need money in my store."

Today the tobacco market is in full swing. The price is good and the crop excellent. One thing has happened to mar the picture. Neither Washington nor Baltimore are ready to exchange for the tobacco farmer's money the things he had been planning all winter to buy. Goldstein specialized in the luxuries and necessities of a passing era.

Harness from Goldstein's was heavy leather sewed with strong waxed thread. The very cut of the blinders on the bridles was duplicated only in gay nineties prints. There were yokes for oxen and hammocks to hang between trees, modest bathing suits for housewives unaccustomed to modern beach dress. The ample stocks of pots and pans that cluttered up the back room were of a style and quality not made today. Mr. Goldstein cannot restock his store and the cracker barrels, even if he has them, can never be quite so comfortable and productive of democracy.

The Draft Term

Many can agree with you and your columnist, Walter Lippmann, that the one-year period of selectee service should be extended—many who will think both of you should be a great deal more candid with your readers. You make an "Appeal to Reason" and then, it seems to me, defy ordinary logic.

You state in your editorial that "the selectees at the end of a year of service would only be half-trained."

Would they, indeed? Then why was the period of training specified as one year, not only by Gen. Marshall but by all the Army experts. This seems to be a complete about-face.

As to the grave national emergency said to be the excuse for the extension—and which the Congress must declare before this service can legally be extended—two questions present themselves.

Is this simply an excuse to have the Congress declare an emergency?

Second, if there is an emergency, where is it?

Moreover, the course of international events must have been known to the Executive and to the Army one year ago. Why, again, was the period of selectee service made one year—in preparation not for "veteran training" but for limited military training, as a backlog of semi-trained manpower?

The Post Impressionist

Antique Aches

If the title of this story seems somewhat ambiguous, its meaning should become clear as the "plot" unfolds, wherein Miss Lottie and Miss May provided the antiques and I—and others—suffered the aches.

One summer when in my teens I was a house guest of two nieces of these estimable ladies in a nearby city. On Saturday afternoon it was decided that the nieces, their parents, and I should drive up for a brief weekend visit to "Aunt Lottie" and "Aunt May," of whom I had heard so much.

As we drew up in front of the house I was told that Miss Lottie had had it remodeled the year before, and that the two-story columns and porch of Southern colonial style dated only from the previous spring. The columns were admittedly imposing, but even to my youthful and untrained eye they formed an obvious architectural mesalliance with the rest of the house, which was unmistakably mid-Victorian in every line.

On entering the hall we fairly stumbled over Miss Lottie's latest "collection," one of bottles, which had been assembled, but not yet arranged for display, on chairs and on the hall floor in the region of the stairs. Our attention was immediately called to this and that prized item in the collection. Vinegar bottles, syrup bottles, whiskey jugs, plain, ordinary, ugly bottles of every sort from brown pill bottles to milk crocks were presented for our admiration as if they had been genuine Sandwich glass. So cluttered was the dim hallway, not only with bottles but also with ancient chairs and hanging whatnots, I could not help thinking what a task it must be to keep all this bric-a-brac dusted. Such a small matter as dust, however, I soon discovered, did not disturb the artistic souls of Miss May and Miss Lottie.

The nieces and I were given "the blue room," and both they and their aunts were enthusiastically insistent that I should have the special privilege of sleeping in the Dutch bed. The Dutch bed, it was explained, Miss Lottie had copied from those she had seen in Europe. Now, the Dutch bed was a quaint, Old World little cubby-hole receding into one wall of the room. It was decorated with Delft blue scenes and looked as if it would be a very snug harbor on a cold, wintry night. What place it had in a room containing a high, four-poster bed, an early colonial dresser, and a utilitarian American washstand I could not see. But Miss Lottie's taste and artistic sense were quite beyond me, anyway. What it meant to sleep in the Dutch bed in mid-August I was to find out several hours later when I tried it.

Meanwhile we were shown into the studio, a huge downstairs room which Miss Lottie's remodeling skill had contrived by removing the partitions from three adjoining rooms. It was not, properly speaking, a studio, where actual work was done, but an art gallery wherein were displayed the largest and best of Miss Lottie's paintings and certain other objets d'art. Chief architectural feature was a large mantel which Miss May had managed to acquire from the ancestral home of an illustrious kinsman, a Confederate general, and the history of which she related in detail. Miss Lottie's canvases, which adorned the wall, ranged from still-life studies of apples and grapes to nude figures which she had done in her Paris days, and which resembled the voluptuous females of Rubens.

Supper was served in a dining room crowded with china closets containing genuinely old pieces and much ornate hand-painted china, which was then in vogue. Accustomed to planning meals for only two women, Miss May had slightly underestimated the appetites of five additional persons, especially the food-consuming capacity of three growing girls. So the ache here was not connected with antiques, but consisted rather of an aching void.

The nieces mounted the little steps up to the high plane of the four-poster and I crawled into the Dutch oven! With a soft shock I sank deep into an engulfing feather bed. Not one breath of faintly stirring air from the hot August night could reach me. My head sheltered by the walled inclosure, I lay stifling and smothering in a billow of feathers. I turned and tossed, but could find no surcease from the agony of being roasted alive.

"Are you asleep?" one of the girls called out eventually in an audible whisper.

"No," I replied in monosyllable torture.

"How do you like the Dutch bed?" she asked.

"All right," I prevaricated feebly, having been taught to be polite if it killed me.

Finally, deciding I could endure it no longer, I groped my way out in the dark, bumped my head in the process, put my pillow on the floor, and slept there in comparative comfort until awakened by the sun next morning—fortunately before the nieces came to life and discovered me.

Shortly before we departed on Sunday afternoon Miss May's and Miss Lottie's brother, who was a practical and highly successful lawyer, told them good-naturedly but firmly that install a bathroom they must; that not once more would he visit them until they had done so. He would pay for it himself.

As it turned out, Miss Lottie was the one who went to the city to select the enamelware. On her way to Crane Co. she unavoidably passed an antique shop. When her brother next came to visit his sisters, he found proudly displayed—no bathroom, but a massive, solid mahogany highboy that had once belonged to Thomas Jefferson.

Super-Strategy Agency

By Ernest K. Lindley

Donovan Counters Nazi Activities

THE REAL SCOPE of Col. William J. Donovan's job has been hidden by mystery and prosaic words. When his appointment as Coordinator of Information was announced on July 11, it was stated that he would collect and assemble information for the use of the President and such other officials as the President might designate.

LINDLEY

It was emphasized that he would not supersede, direct, or duplicate the work of existing Federal information-gathering agencies, including the Army and Navy intelligence service and the FBI.

But it now appears, that Donovan is really entrusted with organizing a central agency to study and devise major strategy. This requires, in the first place, coordinating and analyzing all Axis activities in the military, naval, economic, psychological, and criminal (espionage and sabotage) fields. It also means devising means of countering these activities.

Going a few steps further, Donovan's mission is to work out plans for taking the initiative away from the Axis in the realm of grand strategy, in which psychological and economic instruments are scarcely less important than ships, planes and tanks.

Donovan's office will be staffed with two classes of men: (1) Army and Navy professionals, chiefly intelligence officers and students of strategy, and (2) psychologists, historians, economists, publicists and other intellectuals who may be useful in planning economic warfare and propaganda.

WHAT he is aiming at, in the words of a well-informed official, is an American counterpart of Prof. Haushofer's Geopolitical Institute in Berlin. This organization was the source of much of the Nazi grand strategy and of many of the tactical instruments for furthering it: ranging from the concept of German "lebensraum," through the hate campaigns against the Poles, to such beguilements as the greeting of President LeBrun with the "Marseillaise" and huge banner of welcome from the German lines when he visited the French front before the blitzkrieg in the west was unleashed.

Donovan's only assistant whose name has been announced so far is Robert Sherwood, playwright. Sherwood's understanding of mass psychology has been shown by his plays, which include one of the most moving of the anti-Nazi dramas, and also by his role, established during the last year, as an intimate adviser to the President concerning his major speeches. Sherwood has been present at the drafting of the President's most successful public utterances of the last nine months.

ONE of Sherwood's tasks in Donovan's agency will be to analyze Axis domestic and short-wave broadcasts as they are fed to him by the listening posts of the broadcasting chains and the Federal Communications Commission. He will then supervise the preparation of plays, musical programs, speeches, and other radio material to be shot by short-wave into Nazi-conquered territories to hearten their peoples and undermine the morals of the occupying forces. It is a fair assumption that Sherwood also will make suggestions concerning programs intended for Latin America, and perhaps also for the United States itself.

Until now the psychological offensive has been held by the Axis. The British "V" campaign is the first spirited attempt at a counter-offensive. A major purpose of the "V" campaign is to keep alive the resistance of the conquered peoples and ultimately to mobilize them for sabotage and guerrilla warfare.

DONOVAN, whose prowess as a fighting man is known throughout the non-Axis world from the film "The Fighting 69th," is a firm believer in the effectiveness of guerrilla warfare as a means of crippling both the Nazi mechanized war machine and Nazi efforts to exploit conquered territories.

As ground work for his larger assignment, Donovan will have to coordinate more perfectly the various intelligence agencies of the Government. Their jealousies of each other were a serious obstacle at the outset of the war. Realizing the delicacy of the problem, the President at first named as their coordinator George S. Messersmith, a professional diplomat, then Assistant Secretary of State. Messersmith worked out a system for exchange of information and prevention of overlapping among Army and Navy intelligence, the FBI, the Secret Service, the Postoffice Inspectors, the Internal Revenue intelligence service and other official investigating and gathering agencies.

THE MESSERSMITH reforms did not stick in their entirety. Donovan must undertake to repair and improve them. For the development of successful strategy depends on complete and accurate knowledge of the enemy's activities and plans, from military and naval preparations to sabotage and propaganda. As Donovan has put it, total war requires total information. His first job is to see that it is supplied.

From there his task progresses naturally to the suggestion of countermeasures and then to the formulation of grand strategy.

Donovan did not seek the assignment. He prefers a field command and is understood to have been promised one. But his present task is far more important, and requires far greater ingenuity and imagination. But it is one for which Donovan seems unusually well fitted by a combination of military and political experience, first-hand observation of the present war, plenty of energy and an unshakable conviction that the Nazi regime can and will be beaten.

Fair Enough

By Westbrook Pegler

Electricians' Union

A people punch-drunk and dazed by the blackjacks of professional unioneers and the subtle activities of the Presidential team of Mr. and Mrs. Roosevelt may be unable to answer the bell with a proper show of fight in the general strike of the Electricians' Union in New York. The fact that works of national defense in the Navy Yard at Brooklyn and elsewhere in the area are hampered by this raid of a predatory political organization of the Moscow pattern may be made a special issue, but it really has nothing to do with the case. The interference with the national defense by a man who went to Russia to study the Muscovite way and who has applied his lessons in New York and, by extension, to the whole country which depends on those defense works, will be emphasized, of course. And the national defense issue may be exploited by the union for a mock show of patriotic sacrifice if it appears that by exempting the Navy Yard the unioneers can win over some confused public opinion to their side.

But the fact remains that this union of 18,000 members, many if not most of them unwilling members and victims of a terror, has undertaken to cripple the entire City of New York as a means of compelling the Consolidated Edison Co. to violate its agreement with an independent union of its own employes.

THIS AGREEMENT was forced on the company under the Labor Relations Act after the employes had freely decided that they would not permit the Electricians' Union to represent them. The Electricians' Union then demanded for its own members the jobs which belonged to the independents and failing to get them, struck not only the Consolidated Edison but all other construction in its wide jurisdiction.

The head of the union, who went to Russia and brought back knowledge of the Communist method of crushing the small dealer and dominating the surviving big monopolists of a given industry, is Harry Van Arsdale, and the union in question is the one to which Mrs. Roosevelt addressed her memorable remark that everyone ought to join a union.

VAN ARSDALE was convicted in 1933 of shooting two fellow members of his local and was sentenced to serve from 6 to 12 years in Sing Sing, but was granted a new trial and finally was released when the two men who indubitably had been shot received $15,000 from the union treasury. This was not Van Arsdale's money. It belonged to the workers, but, nevertheless, it was paid over to two men whose testimony might send Van Arsdale to prison and only then did the injured men experience such a surge of union solidarity that they withdrew their charges, insisting that the money was no bribe but merely compensation for damages.

Van Arsdale, now under another conviction and sentence to Sing Sing on a charge of rioting against the peace of New York in a strike last winter is not the only man with a record in the higher councils of this union. William A. Hogan, the treasurer of the vast kitty amassed from the dues and other tributes of the workers, matriculated at Sing Sing long before the shooting and served a sentence for thieving from the death benefits of the members. Nevertheless, Van Arsdale, Hogan and Joe Fay, the hoodlum leader of the corrupt stationary engineers, the man who slugged David Dubinsky for proposing that racketeers be excluded from union leadership, now participate in the negotiations whereby the biggest city in the world pleads for the right to work and live.

IT was even while Van Arsdale was under indictment for rioting that Mrs. Roosevelt addressed a strike meeting of his subjects last winter, not knowing perhaps of his conviction for shooting and the strange recantation, nor knowing that one witness to the shooting was sprayed in the face with acid and another shot dead on a dark street by unidentified men.

But Mrs. Roosevelt does not plead ignorance when she honors the picket line, regardless of the right or wrong of a union's position, and inasmuch as she assumes responsibility for her actions she must also be presumed to know what ground she treads on.

THE Presidential team of Mr. and Mrs. Roosevelt works both sides of the street. The President swears to uphold the Constitution and protect the rights of the people and Mrs. Roosevelt gives aid and comfort to unions indiscriminately, even to a union whose members have attacked the police. The President exhorts the people to unite against a common national enemy and Mrs. Roosevelt not only associates with Communists and predatory unioneers, but upholds by her refusal to cross a picket line, regardless of circumstances, the proposition that a union can do no wrong.

This, furthermore, is the same union, the Brotherhood of Electricians, which barred a destitute American migratory worker from employment because he couldn't pay $300 for a license to earn a living for his wife and children, of which routine, though an outrageous offense, Mrs. Roosevelt glibly remarked to a committee of Congress last winter that it must be a very unusual case.

The Defense Effort

By Mark Sullivan

New Deal And Business Disagree

WASHINGTON seethes with stories of internal trouble in the defense effort. Columnist Raymond Clapper, stirred by desire for quick war effort, complains bitterly of "the headless and rudderless nature of the Administration's defense organization." And Gen. Hugh Johnson predicts that because of inefficiency in the defense organization, "there is going to be hell to pay in this country."

SULLIVAN

The condition is not new. The present phase is merely what Mr. Clapper calls the "shameful climax of what has gone on ever since the defense effort began. The largest cause of it is a fundamental dissension between two groups, the New Dealers and the businessmen who have been called in to help the defense effort.

As long ago as March 10, the carefully accurate periodical Time described intrigues of the New Dealers to get rid of the businessmen or subordinate them. Time said that as "one very necessary preliminary to the whole plan, the United States public must be disabused of its belief that OPM Director William S. Knudsen is a great man, competent to handle defense. . . . Around OPM was fear and gloom. Production was beginning—but politics was being produced faster than ordnance."

Even before that, as long ago as January 27, columnists Joseph Alsop and Robert Kintner recorded that: "In recent months the defense organization has been increasingly afflicted by a schism between the businessmen on one hand, and the labor representatives and New Dealers on the other."

That was more than seven months ago. When a condition has gone on as long as this, it is not one that will be cured by time. The schism between the two groups is as deep and wide, as irreconcilable, as cleavage between any two groups of human beings can be. It is no ordinary political difference, such as between Democrats and Republicans—indeed, nothing of that sort enters into it. This is a difference between ideas as deeply held as religion.

JUST what is this difference? For light on that, and on our whole present problem of war organization, go back 23 years. History frequently helps understanding.

During the Great War we had the same task to organize business and industry for war. It was put in the hands of Mr. Bernard M. Baruch, as chairman of the War Industries Board. He and those associated with him under President Wilson did the job superbly. After it was all over Mr. Baruch compiled a book—he felt that a record of the experience might some day be useful. (As indeed it would be useful today, if it were followed.) Mainly Mr. Baruch's book was an austere record of what had been done; he called it "American Industry in the War—A Report of the War Industries Board." But there was in the book a certain mellowness, the mood of a man who has done a fine job and feels justified satisfaction. In that mood, Mr. Baruch included two brief commendations. One was from an associate, who wrote of the nature of the job they had done:

"THE FAT could be taken off all business for war purposes—but the skeleton and vital organs must be left."

Another comment was from a report published by Yale University Press, "How America Went to War:"

"It was work done well; it maimed industry, but it did not kill it; the indispensable amount of surgery was accomplished with such clean, swift strokes that the wounds healed after the war and left no scars."

FROM those two passages stand out the characteristic that was present in our 1917 organization for war—and is not present in this. In 1917, the effort was to bend American business to the purposes of war, for that had to be done—but at the same time keep the system of privately owned business alive, preserve it as a going concern.

To hold that purpose in 1917 needed no effort on the part of Mr. Baruch and President Wilson—it would be and was simply unconscious on their part. They took private ownership of business for granted—everybody did, literally everybody. It was the only system the world knew. All assumed it would continue. Nowhere in the world was there, on any extensive scale, any system, or proposal of a system, other than privately owned business. It was not until later that there emerged—first in Russia, then in Italy, Germany and elsewhere—a new conception, a conception of business and industry collectivized and government-operated.

TODAY, in our present war effort, the businessmen have the same purpose as Mr. Baruch and President Wilson—to bend business to the purpose of war, but at the same time preserve its life. As surgeons performing an indispensable operation, their intention is that the patient shall live.

Between the businessmen thinking thus, and the New Dealers thinking whatever they think, there is deep mistrust. The mistrust can hardly be cured or compromised. It will go on, and it will impede our war effort, until some fulfillment of Gen. Johnson's dire prediction that "there is going to be hell to pay in this country."

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips

Encirclement

I.

He threatened me much
And used epithets vile,
Stuck his thumb in my eye
In approved barroom style;
Then he gave me the foot
And he jumped on my head . . .
"It is plain to be seen
I'm encircled," he said.

II.

He then picked up a rock
Which he threw with great force
Following up with a bench
And a table, of course;
Then he sat on my chest
With a look unashamed . . .
"This encirclement plot
I expose!" he exclaimed.

III.

Then he followed me home
And he chased me upstairs
'Til I saw stars galore
And red sunsets in pairs;
Out the window I jumped
But he kept up the chase . . .
"I'm encircled," he cried
"And I feel the disgrace!"

IV.

As I then lay inert
He rushed into my house
Where he picked up an axe
And beheaded my spouse;
Then he battered the walls
With a length of gas pipe
As he bellowed "You bums Can't encircle my type!"

V.

Next he poured kerosene
On the shades and the rugs
And applied a huge torch
As he muttered "You mugs!"
Then he threw on more oil
As the flames mounted high . . .
"I'm encircled," he said
When the cops asked him why.

VI.

Then he fired the barns
And he pole-axed the cow
As he poisoned the cat
Without mopping his brow;
Then he shot the watchdog
As he said, "Now you see
How encirclement tends
To keep closing on me!"

VII.

Then he grabbed me again
By my one thatch of hair
And he heaved me a mile,
So it seemed, in the air;
Then he left me for dead—
(I had had quite enough)—
"It's so strange," he exclaimed,
"This encirclement stuff!"

To this department the attempt to get the public to save gasoline by such appeals as "Don't speed!" and "Don't hurry to get through traffic lights!" is plain silly. All you've got to do is watch American autoists on any road anywhere any time to know that they're not the sort of birds to respond to any gentle tactics like these. You might as well tell the kiddies at the picnic not to hurry to the ice cream counter.

Elmer Twitchell insists he will bet you any kind of money that the fellows who thought up this gasoline "don't list" drove at 80 miles an hour coming home from the shore Sunday. And he insists that the most impatient man he saw at a traffic light over the weekend was a save-gas committeeman.

Konoye's Keynote

By Barnet Nover

Japan Cannot Stop

IN A SPEECH delivered in the House of Commons on Wednesday, Anthony Eden, the British foreign secretary, pleaded with Japan's leaders to "reflect while there is still time on whither their present policies are leading them."

NOVER

This warning, like all others previously addressed to Tokyo, fell on deaf ears. That the course which Japan is pursuing is perilous in the extreme and may lead to catastrophe must be clear to many in the island empire. But these individuals are helpless and silent. They know that Japan has gone too far to retreat, that she must go forward to a victory that will leave her unquestioned master over East Asia and Oceania or a defeat that will reduce her to the status of a third-rate power. It is now all or nothing for the island empire.

INDICATIVE of this mood is the statement made by Premier Prince Fumimaro Konoye this week to the commission summoned to work out ways and means of increasing Japan's self-sufficiency. What Japan needs at this time, he said, was swift and determined execution of her national policies "to secure the safety of the country and establish a Greater East Asia coprosperity sphere." In other words, the actions which Great Britain, the United States and the Netherlands have taken to weaken Japan's war-making capacity by depriving her of essential raw material imports, will lead that country to hasten the achievement of her ambitions rather than cause her to stop in her tracks.

Nor was Prince Konoye merely whistling to keep up his courage. There can be no doubt whatever that the "freezing" of Japanese credits put into effect by this country, Great Britain and the Dutch East Indies was a severe blow to the Japanese. The well-informed among them know that the regions under Tokyo's control cannot supply the oil and rubber and tin and iron ore and other supplies Japan needs to keep her industries going and her war effort from bogging down. Nor can she make up the deficit by expanding the production of substitutes. Germany, with an infinitely greater industrial plant than Japan has been unable to replace supplies cut off by the British blockade by the production of ersatz materials.

The only hope for Japan lies in the possibility that, despite the freezing action, Great Britain and the United States will continue their policy of "appeasement" or, alternatively, in a speedy Japanese victory.

APPEASEMENT HAS been tried and found wanting. Feeding Japan with the wherewithals of warmaking did not engender in the Tokyo government any mood of sweet reasonableness. The only thing that can be said for that policy is that with Great Britain, the Dutch East Indies and the United States supplying her with oil and scrap iron and other essentials Japan may have been dissuaded from prematurely undertaking the risky venture of a drive toward Singapore. And the time thus gained has enabled Japan's potential enemies to strengthen their position in the Western Pacific.

Now Japan has taken over the last stepping stone to Singapore, the last but one buffer dividing regions under her control from the Burma Road. And that buffer—Thailand—may soon go the way of French Indo-China. To continue supplying Japan with the raw materials she needs would only strengthen her against the day when a showdown with the Western Powers would become inevitable. And that showdown would come not when the Western Powers are ready but when Japan is ready.

The assumption upon which British and American statesmanship must be grounded is that Japan cannot stop, any more than Hitler can stop, that she must proceed on her aggressive course as long as she has the strength to do so. The policy of the United States and Great Britain must be, therefore, to sap the island empire's strength in every possible way. The freezing of Japanese funds is, if carried out to its logical conclusion, a long step in that direction.

WHEN GERMANY attacked Russia, a nation with whom Japan had only two months before signed a treaty of nonaggression, there were some who argued that this development would lead to a weakening of Japan's link with the Axis. This was wishful thinking and little else.

A German victory in Europe might ultimately, it is true, create certain embarrassments for the island empire. But these would be as nothing in comparison with the dangers to Japan that would follow from a German defeat. Then Japan would find herself alone and helpless and faced by an overwhelmingly powerful combination. That is why, despite two face-destroying rebuffs—the destruction of the German-Japanese anti-Comintern agreement by the German-Russian pact of August, 1939, and the German attack on Russia in June of this year—Japan has continued to cooperate with the Axis. And as long as she proceeds on her present course her activities are advantageous to her partners in Europe.

What we must always bear in mind, therefore, is that the activities of Germany in Europe and of Japan in Asia are not isolated phenomena but part of a world-wide movement to shatter the status quo in favor of the German-Japanese-Italian combination. At the end of four years of war Japan is in a weakened condition. To strengthen her in any way would be suicidal on our part just as it would be suicidal for us to do anything that might strengthen the Third Reich.

Press Ban in Radio Will Hit F. M. Development, FCC Told

By International News Service

The Federal Communications Commission was told yesterday by two radio frequency pioneers that its order proposing to bar newspapers from ownership of radio stations threatens to retard frequency modulation broadcasting indefinitely, and bar many areas from receiving the new radio service.

John Shepard 3d, of Brookline, Mass., president of F. M. Broadcasters, Inc., and John R. Latham, executive vice president of the American Network, Inc., testified before the commission that the entire future of F. M. broadcasting is jeopardized by the order.

Latham told the commission that F. M., at best, faces a long and costly period of development before it can be placed on a paying, commercial basis, and that in many key cities only newspapers which "spend great sums" for promotion, can foot the bill during the development period.

One of the 28 original representatives attending the first F. M. organization meeting, 11 represented newspapers whicr contributed to a Nation-wide survey, Latham testified. But the commission's rule has caused not only the publishers, but others who might be interested to hold back on F. M. development, he asserted.

"It is our considered judgment," Latham said, "that if the commission should refuse to permit F. M. stations to be operated by individuals or corporations who may be interested in the publishing of newspapers, such a policy will delay the development of F. M. as a broadcasting system for years, and will probably make impossible the operation of the F. M. network proposed by our corporation, or the operation of any worth-while network to service and provide programs to F. M. stations.

"In short, if newspaper interests are forbidden to own or operate F. M. stations, it appears clear that some cities would have no F. M. station which could be used as an outlet to the American network, and the public which a station in such a city would otherwise serve would be completely without F. M. service."

Latham cited Atlanta and New Orleans, specifically, as cities where the only parties interested in F. M. to the extent of proposing to build radio stations were newspapers. But because of the commission's ruling some newspapers have not applied for authority to build stations, Latham declared.

Shepard said of 44 members of the F. M. Broadcasters Association 14 have newspaper connections or affiliations, and of approximately 110 applications for commercial F. M. operation 38 are connected or affiliated with newspapers.

A dispute about classing a local radio station program as "news" or "paid advertising" produced five hours of testimony yesterday at the commission's inquiry.

John M. Rivers, president of Station WCSC at Charleston, S. C., appearing as a witness for the FCC, complained that owners of the two newspapers there, which also operate a radio station, had refused to print WCSC programs free as news.

The Gallup Poll

Sentiment for Aid to Britain Not Diminished By Prolonged Nazi-Soviet War, Survey Finds

By George Gallup
Director, American Institute of Public Opinion.

Princeton, N. J., July 31.—New evidence that the majority of voters believe that American aid to Britain should not be diminished even though Hitler is locked in battle with Russia, is revealed in Nation-wide opinion samplings by the American Institute of Public Opinion.

Shortly before Prime Minister Winston Churchill warned that Britain is still not safe from invasion, the Institute completed its survey to test what effect the prolonging of the Nazi-Soviet war has had to date on American sentiment for aiding Britain.

It put before the public the two arguments from entirely different points of view that are being made in connection with the Nazi-Soviet war—(1) that since Germany is now occupied with Russia, it is not so important for America to aid Britain, and (2) that since Germany may defeat Russia and turn her full strength against England, aid to Britain is more important than ever.

Two Groups Polled

A ballot question covering the first argument was put to one cross-section of voters. A second question based on the other argument was put to another cross-section which contained different individuals but was exactly comparable to the first in respect to types of voters, proportions by income groups, age, sex, etc.

An almost perfect correlation in attitude is shown in the replies to the two differently-worded questions.

The results of the first question are:

"Some people say that since Germany is now fighting Russia, as well as Britain, it is not so necessary for this country to help Britain. Do you agree, or disagree, with this?"

AGREE	20%
DISAGREE	72
NO OPINION	8

The second question, put to a comparable cross-section, follows:

"Some people say that since Germany will probably defeat Russia and then turn her full strength against Britain, it is more important then ever that we help Britian. Do you agree, or disagree, with this?"

AGREE	71%
DISAGREE	19
NO OPINION	10

Note that in one case the vote is 72 per cent for aid to Britain and in the other, 71 per cent, although the questions were deliberately stated to emphasize different arguments.

"Split Ballot" Technique

Aside from its indication of where public sentiment lies, the survey emphasizes a fact which the Institute has found to be true in its seven years of work during which polls have been taken on nearly a thousand questions.

The fact is that when opinion is well-established on an issue, variations in wording of a ballot question usually produce virtually no difference in result.

The Institute has for several years pioneered in the use of the "split ballot" device—a device which research experts have watched with great interest because it can establish what effect question-wording has in opinion surveys and minimize or eliminate that variable.

The "split ballot" technique for measuring the effect of phrasing is the device in which two phrasings of the question are made whenever a wording is in doubt.

When one wording is put to half the voters in the cross-section and the other wording to the other half—both halves containing exactly comparable types of voters—the tabulation soon reveals the difference, if any, which may be caused by the wording.

If the difference is greater than the expected difference due to size of sample, new and neutral phrasings must be found.

However, the Institute has found from experience that when every precaution is taken to word the question as neutrally as possible, the wording variation between the two ballot forms usually produces virtually no difference in the results.

Old-Fashioned Preserves Become Sophisticates

Summer Fruits and Berries Become Winter Treats by Contestants' Modern Preserving Methods

By Martha Ellyn,
The Post Food Editor

POLLY isn't putting the kettle on so much for tea-making these days as she is for preserving. The "ripening season" of fruits and vegetables is with us. That means that many homemakers are making jellies, jams, conserves, fruit butters and other delectables.

The perfect jelly, tender, quivering, translucent, with retention of characteristic flavor; plump rich preserves, clear and tender, yet holding their shape; appetizing jams and flavorsome conserves do not just happen but are the result of careful adherence to preserving principles.

Martha Ellyn

The recipes for making these delightful concoctions were submitted by The Post recipe contestants in response to the announcement of the theme—jellies, jams and conserves. But these foods add more than color and flavor to our meals, for they furnish energy as well.

So inclusive are the recipes submitted that Washington cooks will have an opportunity to "swap" recipes in the old-fashioned way by taking note of the many splendid winning recipes. The following are the results of the contest:

Mrs. A. J. Weaver, 3915 Fifth Street Northwest, winner of the first prize, gives a range of recipes that include both fresh and dried fruits. The peach jam recipe is noteworthy because even overripe peaches can be used, thereby conserving the fruit. Her winning recipes follow:

Peach Jam—Peel and crush 5 pounds very ripe peaches. Add 5 pounds sugar and mix thoroughly. Let stand over night. Cook one-half of the mixture over a hot fire for 20 minutes, stirring constantly. Set aside and cool, while cooking the remainder in the same manner. At the last minute of the second half of the cooking process, pour the first batch into the second, heat thoroughly and mix. Let stand until cool, pour into sterilized jars, seal with hot paraffin. Makes approximately four pints.

Dried Apple Jelly—Cook 1 pound dried apples and 2 quarts of water together for 25 minutes. Put into jelly bag and let drip. Measure into the preserving kettle 3 cups of the apple juice and 3 cups of sugar. Add juice of 1 lemon. Cook together over hot fire until the juice will jell when dropped from spoon onto cool dish. Pour into sterilized jars while hot, seal with paraffin. Yield, about 6 glasses of clear amber jelly.

Fig and Pineapple Conserve—Scald 5 pounds of ripe figs in a gallon of boiling water into which 1 tablespoon of soda has been added. It will require about 3 minutes to remove the fuzz and dirt. Grind the figs with large blade of food chopper. Add 1 cup crushed pineapple, 1 cup finely chopped pecan meats and 3 pounds of sugar. Cook over hot fire for about 30 minutes, stirring constantly until jam is thick and clear. Pour while hot into sterilized jars, seal with paraffin. Makes approximately 3 pints.

Looking ahead to the Christmas season, Miss Vella Winner, 3133 Connecticut Avenue northwest, thinks that Rose Geranium Jelly, a delightful reminder of our grandmother's garden, is a treat for both friends and family. Miss Winner captured the second prize of $5 with this floral suggestion, a recipe for Christmas Marmalade and Rhubarb Conserve, a hearty spread that men like. Following are Miss Winner's winning recipes:

Christmas Marmalade—Put 3 oranges and 1 lemon through food chopper, add 1 cup crushed pineapple, 3 pounds sugar and ½ cup water. Boil slowly for ½ hour. Remove from fire and add 1 small bottle minted cherries. Seal in sterilized jars with parajn. Yield, about 10 half pints.

Rhubarb Conserve—Chop 1 quart rhubarb in small pieces, add 1 pint crushed pineapple, the juice of 1 lemon, juice and pulp of 2 oranges, grated rind of 1 orange and 8 cups sugar. Let stand over night. Boil half an hour, add 1 cup blanched almonds, cut fine, and boil for 10 minutes. Seal with paraffin in sterilized jars. Yield, about 12 half pints.

Rose Geranium Jelly—Cut up 3½ pounds tart apples, including core and peel, and simmer for 10 minutes. Mash with masher and squeeze out the juice. If juice does not measure 5 cups, add enough water to make that amount. Put 7½ cups sugar and the juice in large sauce pan, mix and bring to a full boil. Add ½ bottle commercial pectin and continue to boil for half a minute. Remove from fire, crush 12 rose geranium leaves and swish them around in the sirup until proper flavor is attained. Remove the leaves, skim and seal in sterilized jar swith paraffin. Yield, about 10 half pints.

Mrs. Grace F. Hiehle, 3422 South Dakota Avenue Northeast, is the winner of the third prize of $3 with the following jelly, jam and conserve recipes:

Crabapple-Quince Jelly—Obtain 2 cups crabapple juice by washing and halving 2 pounds crab apples with stems left on. Place in a saucepan with just enough water to cover. Cook until crabapples are mush, stirring often. Pour into a jelly bag. Let drip undisturbed. The juice will fill about 2 cups. Quarter and cook 2 pounds quinces in same manner as the apples and allow to drip through the jelly bag—will make about 2 cupsful. Place 2 cups apple juice and 2 cups quince juice in sauce pan, add 3 cups sugar, stir until sugar is dissolved. Boil rapidly to 222 degrees Fahrenheit, or until a few drops slide off spoon in a sheet. Remove from heat, skim, pour quickly into hot sterilized glasses and cover with paraffin. Yield, about 6 glasses.

The residue left in the jelly bag after juice has dripped through may be moistened with a little water, combined with 2-3 its volume in sugar, then boiled down to thick spread. Process—The mixture is first forced through a sieve, then add about ½-cup water or fruit juice, then the sugar, then boil.

1646 Thirty-third Street Northwest

Currant and Gooseberry Jelly—Crush 2 pounds fully ripe currants and 2 pounds gooseberries in a large saucepan; add 1 cup water, bring to boil and simmer covered for 10 minutes. Place in a jelly cloth or bag and squeeze out the juice, measure to make 5 cups. Combine 7 cups sugar and the juice in a large saucepan and mix. Bring to boil quickly and at once add ½ cup bottled pectin, stirring constantly. Bring mixture to a full rolling boil and let it boil rapidly for ½ minute. Remove from heat, skim and pour quickly into sterilized glasses. Pour paraffin on hot jelly at once. Make 11 6-ounce glasses.

Mrs. Pauline T. Crew
1910 T Street Southwest

Damson-Plum Conserve—Pit and halve 2 pounds damson plums. Cut in small pieces. Cook 1 chopped orange (peel and all) with 1 pint water for 20 minutes. Add the plums and ½ cup raisins and cook until ½ the liquid evaporates. Add 3 cups sugar and cook rapidly until mixture will heap upon a spoon. Add ¼ cup walnut meats, pour into hot, sterilized glasses. Cover with paraffin. Makes about 8 glasses.

Miss Agnes Lee Mawyer
2125 North Military Road
Arlington, Va.

Grape Conserve—To 4 pounds prepared Concord or slip-skin grapes, allow 2 pounds of sugar, 1 cup seedless raisins, 1 orange, 1 cup nut meats and 1 teaspoon salt. Slip the skins from the grapes and keep them separate from the pulp. Peel the orange and discard the seeds. Chop the orange pulp and peel fine. Also chop the nuts fine. Boil the grape pulp, stirring constantly, for about 10 minutes, or until the seeds show. Press through a sieve to remove seeds. To the grape pulp, add the sugar, the raisins, the orange and salt. Boil rapidly, stirring to prevent scorching, until the mixture begins to thicken. Add the grape skins and boil 10 minutes longer, or until somewhat thickened. Stir in the chopped nuts, pour at once into sterilized jelly glasses and seal. Makes about 10 glasses.

Mrs. I. Phillips Frohman
2924 Nichols Avenue Southeast

Spiced Blueberry Preserves—Wash 2 quarts blueberries, add 1 teaspoon cinnamon, ½ teaspoon ground cloves and ½ cup vinegar and boil for half hour. Add 2 cups sugar and boil half hour more or until thickened. Stir frequently after adding sugar so as to prevent scorching. Pour into sterilized jars and seal. Makes about 2 pints.

Mrs. M. Hook
313 Douglas Street Northeast

Quince-Apple Jelly—Wash 3 pounds quinces and 3 pounds apples, remove cores of apples and seeds of quinces, but do not pare. Cut quinces into small pieces and apples into quarters. Cover with water, cooking separately until tender. Drain off juices seprately in jelly bag. Do not squeeze bag. Measure juices and combine in equal portions. Add 2-3 cups heated sugar for each cup of juice. Stir until sugar is dissolved. Boil rapidly about 15 minutes, or until jelly sheets from spoon (that is, after cooling slightly the jelly tears off in distinct pieces). Pour into hot sterilized glasses. Seal immediately with melted paraffin. Makes about 10 glasses. This jelly may be given a different flavor by adding a sliced and seeded lemon to each quart.

Mrs. Albert
206 Auburn Avenue Bethesda, Md.

Blueberry and Crabapple Conserve—Cut 3 quarts crabapples in quarters, remove cores but do not pare. Put through food chopper, measure, add enough water to almost cover apples and cook 10 minutes. Add 1 quart blueberries and 6 pounds sugar, let cook until thick. Pour into hot sterilized glasses; cool, cover with hot paraffin. Makes 2 quarts.

Mrs. Mary Wilson
3025 Fifteenth Street Northwest

Tomato Jam—Heat 3 cups molasses, 1 cup cider vinegar, 2 cups brown sugar. Add tied in a cheese cloth bag, 1 tablespoon allspice and 1 stick cinnamon. Peel 5 pounds ripe firm tomatoes and add to this sirup. Cook slowly for 2 hours. Add 3 cups seedless raisins and cook 2 hours more. Place in sterilized jars and seal.

Mrs. John D. Swisher
61 West Washington Street Hagerstown, Md.

Blackberry Jelly—Prepare blackberry juice by grinding thoroughly 2 quarts fully ripe, cleaned blackberries. Place the fruit in a jelly cloth or bag and squeeze out the juice. If there is less than 3 cups juice, add water to pulp in bag in jelly cloth. Measure 6 cups sugar into dry dish and set aside until needed. Measure juice into a 3 to 4-quart saucepan and place over hot fire. Add powdered pectin, mix well, and continue stirring until mixture comes to a hard boil. At once pour in sugar, stirring constantly. Continue stirring, bring to a full rolling boil, and boil hard ½ minute. Remove from heat, skim, pour quickly into hot sterilized jars. Paraffin hot jelly at once. Makes about seven glasses.

Mrs. Sara Lee Orange
5907 Third Street Northwest

Prunecot Conserve—Wash 1 pound dried prunes, 1½ pounds apricots and cut into pieces. Combine prunes, apricots, ¾ cup orange juice, 1 sliced lemon, 3 cups sugar and 4 cups water in large preserving kettle. Cook slowly for 45 minutes, or until thick, stirring occasionally. Add ¾ cup toasted Brazil nuts or walnuts and stir until thoroughly combined. Remove from heat; pour into hot sterilized jelly glasses and paraffin at once. Makes about five 8-ounce jars.

Mrs. Jay Lawlor
1627 Thirty-fifth Street Northwest

Bittersweet Conserve—Cut 2 pounds rhubarb in small pieces after cleaning it. Prepare 1 grapefruit by peeling, discarding seeds and white membrane. Simmer gently for 1 hour. Add 1 lemon, both the grated rind and juice. Cook until the mass is mushy, then measure it. Add weight for weight, measure for measure of sugar, simmer slowly until fruit is clear and transparent. While hot, pour into sterilized glasses and seal.

America is upsetting its fruit basket all over the country to make ready for jam sessions. Mrs. A. G. Weaver, insert, took peaches, dried apples and figs from the basket to make products which won for her the first prize in the contest

The line-up of jellies, jams and conserves means that they will team up with tender biscuits, hot toast, flavorsome meats and a host of other foods to give flavor and color to menus. There are two schools of thought on jelly making—achievement of a perfect product by the pectin contained in fruit, and use of commercial pectin, available in liquid and powder form

Hints for Jelly Making

PREPARING THE FRUIT—Select mixture of slightly underripe and ripe fruit and prepare in small lots at a time.

Wash fruits thoroughly, discarding any spoiled parts.

Cut hard fruits, such as crabapples, quinces and apples into pieces.

Add enough water to barely cover hard fruits. Currants, grapes and berries need only enough water to start them cooking. Boil until fruit is tender.

Pour hot cooked fruit at once in jelly bag and let drip. When dripping has almost ceased, press jelly pag. Re-strain through a fresh jelly bag to make juice as clear as possible.

PECTIN—Is a substance in some fruit that when heated and combined with fruit acid and sugar causes the substance to congeal or "jell." All fruit does not contain this substance, but the cook may extract the pectin from fruits that are known to contain it, such as apples, plums, quinces, etc. and combine it with fruit juices and feel confident that she can make jelly, or use jelly compounds (commercially prepared pectin).

PECTIN TEST—It is necessary to test the juice for pectin to determine whether it contains sufficient pectin which will indicate the amount of sugar to be used.

1. To 1 teaspoonful of cooked juice, add 1 teaspoonful of grain alcohol and stir slowly.

(a) Juices rich in pectin will form a large amount of bulky gelatinous material.

(b) Juices moderately rich in pectin will form a few pieces of gelatinous material.

(c) Juices poor in pectin will form small flaky pieces of sediment.

2. Or mix 2 teaspoons Epsom salts, 2 tablespoons cooked fruit juice. Stir well and let stand for 20 minutes. If mixture forms into a semisolid mass the juice contains sufficient pectin.

Pectin must be added to juices poor in pectin by adding other juice which is high in pectin, or commercial pectin may be added.

ACID TEST—Juices rich in pectin may lack acid to make good jelly. No simple household method can be used except tasting the juice for tartness. Lemon juice may be added if necessary to give acid content.

SUGAR ADDITION—The amount of sugar will be determined by the pectin and acid content of the juice. The less pectin the less sugar used. For juices rich in pectin use ¾ cup sugar to 1 cup juice; for juices poor in pectin, add only ½ cup sugar. The juice should be boiling when sugar is added. Cooking of jelly should be done as rapidly as possible. As a rule jellies and preserves made in small quantities are more satisfactory. Work with not more than 6 to 8 cups of juice at one time. A good jelly should retain its shape, be clear, and tender. Fruit juices may be canned during summer and made into jellies as wanted.

TESTING FOR JELLY POINT—Dip spoon or wooden paddle in sirup. As boiling mass nears jellying point it will drop from side of spoon in two drops. When drops run together and slide off in a flake or sheet from side of spoon, the jelly is finished and should be removed from fire at once. Pour into sterilized glasses and set aside to cool. Cover with melted paraffin. If the jelly glasses are of the type with caps, place on tightly and store. A candy or jelly thermometer may be used in testing finished jelly. Temperature of boiling juice at jellying point will be from 220 to 222 degrees F. at sea level. At higher altitudes the temperature will be lower.

Men Prefer Huge Towels For Their Bath

"Well," began the head of the family in That Tone of Voice. "Looks to me like I ought to have a decent towel if we can afford to go in for French antique furniture. Where do you get these little water resistant numbers anyway."

"Basement bargains," replied his lady meekly, for they had been bought out of a budget specially trimmed to squeeze out the Louis XV chairs.

Far be it from us to frown on fine furniture . . . we too have been guilty a time or two of robbing Peter to pay Paul. But here's a tip—if you do go off the deep end on something lovely, don't plan to pay for it by stinting on things affecting the man in the case. That just calls for remarks. Do your skimping where he won't notice.

And especially don't skimp on bath towels, for you or for him either, for piles of soft huge absorbent bath towels are one luxury not out of any average homemaker's reach. The bigger the better as far as the men folk are concerned. Those big bath sheets of turkish towelling that you buy for swimming are wonderful the year around for those to whom bathing is a pleasure as well as a necessity. We're partial to all snowy white towels but colors are gay and practical if planned with an effective decorative scheme in mind.

Another towel supply to look to right now is linen hand towels. They're already scarcer and dearer than they were but they're still available. Cotton huck will do, of course, but it is not as fastidious as linen. So it behooves us to do a little polite grabbing before the war closes in on shipments of Irish linen.

Cranberry-Honeydew Two-in-One Dish

Cranberry sherbet and honeydew melon balls make a winning combination. This dish can function as a delicious dessert or can be an appetizing starter for a summer meal.

Prepare some tangy cranberry sherbet and cut some melon balls with a ball-cutter from a honeydew melon. In each serving plate, place a scoop of cranberry sherbet and surround it with a garland of green honeydew balls. It is as good as it looks.

Capital Dazzles American, Here After 36 Years Abroad

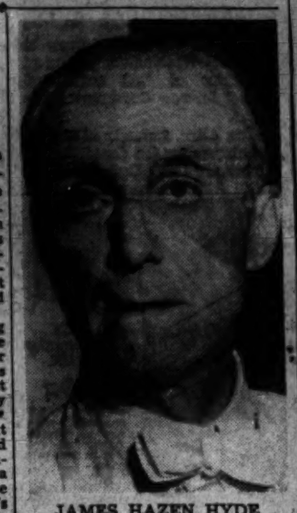
James Hazen Hyde Finds It Far From 'Sleepy' City He Knew

By Edward T. Folliard
Post Staff Writer

James Hazen Hyde, wealthy bon vivant, scholar and diplomat without portfolio, who left his native America in 1903 to become a permanent resident of Paris, has been paying a visit to Washington this week, his first in 40 years. He confessed yesterday that he was somewhat dazzled by the changes that have taken place between T. R. and F. D. R.

The tall, aristocratic-looking Hyde, one of the best known of the Americans in the French capital for a generation, recalled that on his last visit here he had been the guest of United States Senator Chauncey Depew, who died in 1911.

Theodore Roosevelt was President at the time, having just succeeded the martyred McKinley. In company with Depew, Hyde attended a diplomatic reception at the White House, and later was the President's guest at supper. He recalled meeting Alice Roosevelt, who, in those days before her marriage to Nicholas Longworth, was being toasted as "Princess Alice."



JAMES HAZEN HYDE

Quiet, Sleepy City

"Washington was a quiet, sleepy little Southern city in those days," Mr. Hyde recalled. "Today it is a great national, imperial sort of city."

(The city then had a population of about 278,718. Today it is a world capital and America's tenth city, with probably 700,000 in the District proper and one million in the metropolitan area.)

A connoisseur whose Paris home was noted for its library and art collection, Hyde said he was much impressed by the new National Gallery of Art here and by the quality of the pictures which Andrew Mellon bequeathed to it.

"I was also much moved by the Lincoln Memorial," he said. "I could not help but note the profound effect it has on the people who go there. What a handsome structure it is, and how well it fits into the plan of L'Enfant!"

Mr. Hyde then paid a compliment to the Pan American Union Building and praised the sentiment behind it. He had visited Mount Vernon when he came here as an elegant young man of 25, but he went on another pilgrimage to the shrine the other day.

He was looking forward to a visit to Dumbarton Oaks, the 50-acre Georgetown estate of his "old friends," Mr. and Mrs. Robert Woods Bliss. The Bliss' have deeded the estate to the United States Government and Harvard University, and have given 27 acres to the District for a public park.

Glad to Be Back

The visitor, who holds the grand cross of the Legion of Honor, the highest decoration at France's disposal, said he was glad to be back in his homeland and was sorry he didn't come back sooner. Shortly after arriving in his native New York he hired a tug and sailed around Manhattan to view a skyline which had changed radically since he sailed away in 1905. Following his tug boat ride he went sightseeing in the metropolis, with a WPA guide book in hand.

"Women appeared to be much better dressed than when I went abroad 35 years ago," Hyde said. "I might say the same thing for the men. People seem more civil, too, but they also are very independent. I sincerely hope they stay that way.

"The air-conditioning is a new one on me. I think it is a wonderful thing."

Hyde, who has been staying at the Mayflower, said he noted a striking improvement in the hotels he had visited. He said they were more comfortable and furnished in better taste. He also thought the "cinemas" very good. In the course of a 30-minute conversation, this was the only French word Mr. Hyde used, aside from the phrase "entre nous." For a man who has been speaking largely in French for 35 years, he appears to have done a good job of adjusting himself to his native country.

At the turn of the century, Hyde, heir to the millions his father made through the Equitable Life Insurance Co., was a brilliant figure in New York's "Four Hundred," a contemporary of George Gould, Ward McAllister, Harry Lehr, "Bet-a-Million" Gates and the O. H. P. Belmonts.

Famed for Dinners

After he became a permanent resident of Paris, he acquired two homes, one of them a pavilion near Versailles which is on ground once owned by Mme. Pompadour. The "Hyde dinners" were notable events in the French capital. Reminiscing yesterday, he recalled one dinner, given a few years after the World War, at which two of the guests were Marshal Ferdinand Foch, the Allied generalissimo, and the late Frank H. Simonds, one of America's most noted journalists.

"Simonds wanted to know if he might ask Foch some questions about the Battle of the Marne," Hyde recalled. "When Foch agreed, Simonds began asking questions about the movement of troops and about many highly technical matters. Foch was surprised and delighted that a layman should possess such a stock of military lore. He called for a pad of paper. Then he drew the plan of the Battle of the Marne, explained its strategy, and then wrote on the pad, 'To my friend and colleague, Frank Simonds.'"

(Simonds, a student of military strategy from boyhood, predicted the World War, and in the years before his death here in 1936 always alluded to Versailles as the "alleged finish." He was convinced that the current European war would come to pass.)

Won't Discuss Nazis

Hyde, who in his early days in Paris wore a pointed black beard that was the envy of other devotees of the "Van Dyke," is smooth shaven now, and goes in for a white bow tie and a linen suit with an extraordinarily long coat. He is planning a motor tour across the continent to get better acquainted with the country he wishes he had returned to sooner.

He declined yesterday to talk about the Nazis in France, the Vichy government or anything smacking of war or politics. He did recall a conversation he had with Henri Bergson, a close friend, shortly after the current war started. He said he asked the French philosopher if he believed in human progress, and quoted Bergson as replying:

"I used to but I can't any longer. The only thing I can believe in is progress in scientific destruction."

Hyde said that America today has the fate of humanity and civilization in her hands. How best she may serve them, he said, is the great question of the day. Since his return, he said, he had visited Harvard, his alma mater, Princeton, Yale and other universities. A member of some 30 learned and art societies in the captials of the world, he plans to live this autumn at Cambridge and join in the intellectual life at Harvard.

"American universities have a great responsibility," he said. "They are the oasis of culture in a desert of desolation and distress, because if they don't keep the sacred fires going the world will go back to the Dark Ages. There simply won't be any more culture or scientific research. There will only be destruction."

Hyde said he regarded the current war as a continuation of the World War of 1914-18. His final thought was of the Americans he had observed at Mount Vernon and the Lincoln Memorial, and their air of respect and veneration.

"I hope," he concluded, "that, by unity and cooperation, we will make it possible for future generations to have the same respect and veneration for the American leaders of today."

A. A. V. W. Gets British Thanks

A radiogram of gratitude for American women's aid to England was received from the British Federation of University Women this week at national headquarters of the American Association of University Women here, it was announced yesterday.

Dr. Esther Caukin Brunauer, secretary of the University Women's War Relief Committee, pointed out that the radiogram was sent from the annual general meeting of the British Federation's council—a meeting which corresponds to the biennial convention of the A. A. U. W.

The A. A. U. W. has sent funds totaling 3,000 pounds for aid of British university women refugees and their children, along with funds for similar relief in China and other war-stricken countries.

The radiogram expressed "to women of the U. S. A., through the American Association of University Women, deep appreciation of the magnificent help of all kinds they are giving to the cause of freedom."

Dr. Brunauer commented on the fact that British university women managed to hold their annual general meeting in spite of the dislocations caused by war.

Madame Chairman

By Suzanne

MISS NANCY PARKER assistant director of International Student House, is accustomed to greeting assorted guests from various parts of the world. But this week even she was surprised at a newcomer on her threshold—a Great Dane dog from Spring field, Ohio.

A young man, coming here to look for work, a friend of a staff member's son, brought the dog with him and they both put up at International House.

It meant just another little flurry in the busy schedule of Miss Parker, who had just been assisting with the painting of furniture for a terrace on the fifth floor. There students use the refurbished nook for lounging and recreation.

Miss Parker's own international background reaches back to a year of teaching English, history, science and geography in a mission school in Palestine in the 1938-39 session. The next year she taught at a Friends School in Maine, before coming to International House here at 1708 New Hampshire Avenue Northwest.

Depression Overcasts Man's Home Life, as Result Of Hard Drinking 'Good Fellowship,' Practised As Business-Getting Device; His Wife Asks Advice

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am 38 years old and married to a man several years my senior. We have two children, a comfortable home and no financial worries. Under ordinary circumstances, we get along very well, but there is one disturbing element. His work is such that "good fellowship" plays an important part, and many times this "fellowship" leads to excessive drinking.

About twice a week, something turns up to detain him down town,—and I do believe him when he says he has been conferring with a client or associate. However, I can depend upon him to come home intoxicated to some degree. Also, when we go out socially or have guests in, he shows little restraint if drinks are served. I know this is not due to craving for alcohol, as we have liquor in the house practically all the time and he doesn't care for it, except when in the company of friends who enjoy social drinking.

Following his conferences, he may come home early in the evening or late at night—sometimes as late as 1 or 2 a. m., or even later. When he comes home early, the children see him and realize his condition. Many times, too, he brings his associates along and they are in the same condition. The effect upon me is very depressing, causing great emotional strain, and also making it difficult to handle the children properly.

My husband agrees with me that this is a "bad" situation. He says that it shall not continue; that what he wants of life is his work and his family, free from "entanglements." (He seems to be very fond of the children and of me). But the situation has continued, even so, for about 5 years; and he has been drinking more frequently the last few years.

I have thought of hiring a housekeeper and taking an office position, for the purpose of filling my mind, as much as possible, with outside interests—hoping this would give me a more optimistic view of the situation. Our religion prevents divorce, and while we are able to live comfortably on my husband's present income, a division of income (to support two households) would cut all of us down to the bare necessities of existence. I would like your opinion of the situation; and some suggestions for remedying it, if possible. Sincerely,

E. M. B.

Reform Must Begin In Man's Consciousness

DEAR E. M. B.: Your husband alone has the potential power to remedy this really serious situation. And the remedy would need to begin in his own consciousness—in his realization of the indisputable fact that "social drinking" is getting the upper hand of him (as it does of a formidable percentage of all who practice it; and that if he fools with it any longer, it will be an inevitable and incalculable detriment to his domestic and professional security.

For years now, he has been cheating his faculties of their proper employment, by relying upon alcoholic stimulants to do much of his work for him; to carry him—in a more or less anaesthetized condition—through trying circumstances which, if "stood up to" in a mettlesome mood of sober resourcefulness, would have made him ("day by day, in every way"), a keener, deeper, stronger, more magnetic and more compelling personality than he was before. By this procedure, he has been doing himself double damage—both impairing his faculties by failing to use them to the level of their capacity (a form of exercise which would normally invigorate and progressively expand them), and debilitating the very source of their energy, to wit: his organic and nervous health, by habitually polluting his circulatory system with alcoholic irritants or depressants, as the case may be.

He has reached the "vicious circle" phase of "social drinking," wherein a man no longer drinks "just for fun," but because he feels he must drink, in order to experience a sense of well being. He is very near to being the slave of drink; only a short way removed from being a "drunk"; and unless he cuts clear of the circle now, while his nerves, as well as his domestic and professional affairs, still retain some semblance of stability, it is likely that he and his affairs will eventually go to pieces under the influence of chronic tippling.

Since his habit of drinking has become interwoven with his habits of work, there is some question as to whether he could effect a cure without changing his place of employment—even if he were given to see whither he is drifting, and were fully determined to save himself from such a fate. I know of one instance in which an extraordinarily able man was brought, by professional accommodation to hard-drinking "good fellowship," to a rather worse condition than this—and whose health and brilliant social usefulness were rehabilitated only by his resigning his job and moving hundreds of miles away (with his family) to engage in work of a different sort—where efficiency-plus was the prime requirement.

Of course, when a man is in his forties (as I judge your husband to be), a change of place-and-type of employment is a serious step. It may amount to "a leap in the dark,"—and it certainly means tearing himself loose from what has come to represent the foundation of his total security. But it is proverbial wisdom that, "desperate diseases require desperate remedies;"— and there is no more "desperate" personality affliction than incipient addiction to drink. However, if your husband would ponder his dilemma, and recognize the fact that he must choose,—and soon,—between total reform and the inexorable slow disintegration of personality, it is possible he would find the heroic strength to stand his ground where he is, and cast off the tentacles of the vicious habit.

In any event, I think it would be a mistake for you to get a job, as a supposed means of attaining an optimistic view of the situation. Any lessening of your husband's sense of obligation to give you economic security and peace of mind is likely to encourage his indulgence in drink. Give him more freedom in his present distrait state, and he will misuse it. But let him carry his whole load of responsibility, and it cannot but steady his performance to some degree—and perhaps in the last analysis, provide the necessary inducement to permanent reform.

M. H.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

Peasant Influence In Full Skirts

This year's collection of back-to-school cottons shows several important style trends. There is the peasant influence as seen in full skirts, apron-like trims, appliques, calico prints, peasant-embroidered blouses and broomstick skirts.

There is also the patriotic influence from which stems military styles and nautical-looking middies, sailor collars and lacings. This middy fashion is only one of a large number of long torso effects, many of them jumpers and jerkins.

This Coat Leads a Double Life

Durable and versatile, this chic new ensemble of beaver-dyed mouton lamb is perfect for the college girl's wardrobe. The 32-inch coat has a matching muff.

Harbinger of fall — the new 1941 fur coat silhouette with its slimmer more natural lines was presented to Washington last night by a local store in a fashion showing on the Shoreham Terrace. The same store sponsors a second showing of furs 9:30 tonight on the Terrace.

In this collection of new furs slated for an August sale, eight styles were predominant. Varying in price and length, all had one thing in common—the rounded, softened look about the shoulders and casual sleeves.

Among the styles shown for the college or "younger set" was a 32-inch long coat of baby ocelot a South American fur resembling leopard. With it comes a visor hat made of fur combined with velvet, and a pocketbook muff. Persian lamb was represented in two lustrious black models. One was a box coat with the new bishop sleeves, cut full and beautifully draped. The other Persian coat was a fitted model with molded hips and an easy bodice.

Army Rations for Men in Action Show Advance in Nutrition

By Ida Jean Kain

IF YOU should happen to meet one of our soldiers on manuevers and found him carrying candy bars and peanut butter, you might think he was on a picnic. But that's no picnic lunch. Those are his emergency rations.

It has always been a difficult problem to feed an Army when it is making a rapid advance and that of feeding the parachute troops has demanded even greater ingenuity. But by putting into use the brilliant scientific research along nutrition lines, the Army now has a light but balanced ration.

The requirements which must be met in the emergency rations are these: They must contain essential food elements, take up very little space, and be tasty. To boost their vitamin content, both the candy bar and the peanut butter have been fortified with brewer's yeast extract. The candy is an excellent source of quick energy, and the peanut butter packs quite a nutritional wallop. It is rich in energy—100 calories per tablespoon—furnishes a large amount of good protein, some carbohydrates and fats, and vitamins A, B and G. And, of prime importance, it does not deteriorate quickly.

Far Cry From Hardtack

Such fare should not be satisfying as a steady diet. Also, it is too concentrated to be used right along. But it does provide an emergency ration which keeps up the soldier's energy and morale.

You get an idea of the tremendous advances in nutrition when you compare the soldier's rations today with the hardtack used 20 years ago. All the research over the past decade is being mobilized for the feeding of our Army and you may be sure that our fighting forces are the best fed in the world.

You need have no fear that the German army has any nutritional secrets that we do not have. Quite a fuss has been made over the German parachutists' light rations of a pemmican and candy, which are intended to sustain them for nine days. But D. Russell Wilder, chairman of the Food and Nutrition Committee, reassures us that "they have nothing we do not have. And as a matter of fact, much of the information Germany has put into use and their knowledge of many of the vitamins came out of American laboratories."

Scarlet for Nails Going in Eclipse

Hollywood, Calif.—Scarlet nail polish is suffering an almost total eclipse among the pulchritudinous members of the Navy Blues Sextet. With the exception of Claire James and Lorraine Gettman, who still prefer ruby red nails, the sextet is in favor of a meeker shade that is very new and which the girls call a "true pink." Marguerite Chapman introduced the new shade to Peggy Diggins, Georgia Carroll and Kay Aldridge and showed them her own unique way of applying it.

'Chip' Robert to Visit Gen. Comacho in Mexico

Although not official good neighbors—in the strict sense of the phrase—Mr. and Mrs. "Chip" Robert will be off on a flying visit to Mexico this month. While there, they will be the guests of the brother of the President, Gen. Maximino Comacho and Senora de Comacho. A fiesta will be in order on August 23, when the general will celebrate his birthday.

The Roberts will meet Mr. and Mrs. Bertrand Taylor, of New York, in Brownsville, Ala., on the 21st and the party will take a plane there for Mexico City. Alabama has been picked as the meeting place because Evie and her husband will be in Mobile the weekend before as the guests of Gov. and Mrs. Frank M. Dickson, where they have an important "fishing date."

The Comachos have one of the loviest homes in Mexico City and several farms in the State of Pueblo. Their house, which is in Chapultepec, a suburb of Mexico City, is famous for its entrance hall, the walls of which are lined with brilliant Puebla tile. The general was formerly Governor of the State of Pueblo and is now a division general in the Mexican army on active duty. He visited Washington last spring on a good-will tour and was feted morning, noon and night. Two of the largest affairs given in his honor included a reception at the embassy and a dinner party given him by Undersecretary of State Sumner Welles.

To Visit Edisons At Spring Lake

Mr. and Mrs. Robert were in Mexico for the inauguration of President Comacho last December. Evie is well acquainted with the country, having lived there until she was 5 years old. As a matter of fact, she learned to speak Spanish before English.

The Roberts have a whirl of out-of-town engagements to keep before starting off on their "south of the border" journey. This weekend they will go to Spring Lake, N. J., to visit Gov. and Mrs. Charles Edison. The Edisons are well known in Washington, where he formerly served as Secretary of the Navy. Accompanying the Roberts on this weekend trip will be Mrs. George Pettengill, wife of the Commandant of the Navy Yard, Admiral Pettengill.

Mrs. Robert, who has just returned from New York City, will be off again later in the month for a weekend at Saratoga, N. Y. This is one event she never misses and Mr. Robert hopes to accompany her to the races. Following their visit to Mexico, Mr. and Mrs. Robert will go to the air base at Corpus Christie for a stay. They also plan to be on hand for the celebration of Mrs. Edward T. Stotesbury's birthday on September 6. There will be a family gathering at the Stotesbury home in Bar Harbor, Me., around this time for Mrs. Lionel Atwill and Eaton Cromwell will also be there.

Mrs. Atwill Returns Here

Mrs. Atwill returned to Washington on Wednesday from New York, where she had been for several days following a visit to Col. J. W. Flanagan's estate in Canada. Also there from Washington were George Williams and Mrs. Alberta Smith. Col. Flanagan entertained his guests at a series of parties, among them a large tea and dinner.

Mrs. Atwill returned with her brother, James Cromwell, one-time Minister to Canada, who also visited the colonel. She will leave next week for Bar Harbor to visit her mother, Mrs. Stotesbury. After that she hopes to go to her farm, Indian Summer, in north Michigan, near Grand Travers. The 75-acre place is on Lake Michigan and at one time was an Indian reservation.

Horse Show Entries Listed

Out-of-town exhibitors will make their headquarters in Washington during the Columbus Horse Show, which is attracting topnotch hunters and jumpers to the Meadowbrook Saddle Club show grounds tomorrow and Sunday.

Mrs. M. E. Whitney To Show Six Horses

Those who are sending mounts from a distance include Misses Betty and Peggy Mills, of Newton Square, Pa., who will show Baby Snooks and Jack o' Dandy. Peggy, only 12 years old, rides open jumpers with the ability of a veteran, as she proved when she won two important classes at the Rumson (N. J.) event last week.

Others are Mrs. M. E. Whitney, from Llangollen Farm at Upperville, Va., who will exhibit six horses and is expected to ride them herself in many hunter classes; Mrs. D. N. Lee, of Middleburg, whose Glamour Man will show; Miss Betty Couzens, daughter of the late Senator from Michigan and Mrs. James Couzens, with three good conformation horses; Allen H. Smith, from Gastonia, N. C.; Miss Ruth O'Keefe, of Pine Brook Farm at Warrenton; Rigan McKinney, prominent Maryland steeplechase rider, and Miss Peggy Sampson, of Richmond, Va.

Judges for the show are George M. Carnochan, of New York; Raymond H. Norton, of Potomac, Md., and Otto Furr, of Middleburg. Lieut. Col. James Duke and Frank B. O'Mahoney will score the open jumpers and Miss Margaret Cotter and Thomas Trodden will judge the junior classes on Sunday morning.

Committee for entertainment of exhibitors is headed by Miss Eva Rabbitt, with Miss Angelina Carrabelli as co-chairman. Members are Misses Frances Mace, Esther Dickson, Delores Urbank, Janice Cahill, Peggy Lou Moore, Evelyn Jonas, Patty Kettel and Mrs. Ellett Owings.

Exhibitors Luncheon Scheduled for Tomorrow

Hostesses for the exhibitors' luncheon, to be held Saturday in the spacious Meadowbrook Saddle Club, are Mrs. R. E. L. Smith, Mrs. A. J. Cummings, Mrs. N. H. McDowell and Misses Gloria and Lillian Crowder and Anne Hagner.

Other parties for owners and riders include a reception at the show headquarters in the Wardman Park Hotel immediately following the Sunday afternoon session, and—just to strike an unusual note in horse show entertaining—a straw ride and informal reception at the Knights of Columbus Hall at Forest Glen, Md.

The Rev. Lindsay A. Semmens officiated at the ceremony, which took place in the bride's home on Carroll Avenue, Takoma Park, Md.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, wore a full-sleeved gown of white flowered marquisette fashioned with lace inserts and a wide skirt. Her long veil fell from a coronet of seed pearls and she carried a colonial bouquet of white roses.

The matron of honor, Mrs. William White, topped her pink tulle skirt with a rayon moire bodice. Her headdress of pink roses matched the flowers she carried.

A reception was held immediately following the ceremony. The bride's mother, who wore a street-length ensemble of blue lace, was assisted by Miss Betty Jean Whitman, Miss Helen Jones and Miss Barbara Grange.

After the reception the newlyweds left by automobile for a honeymoon. They will make several stops en route to Legrange, where they will make their home.

Both the bride and her husband are graduates of the Washington Missionary College.

He is formerly of New York but has resided in Washington for some years and is associated with the Department of Justice.

Miss Gloria Barnaud will be maid of honor for her sister and the bridesmaids will be the Misses Mary Grace Zimmerman and Marion Kane. Thomas F. McMahon will be best man and the ushers are James J. Kelly and Norman Jarvis, of Washington.

Carmody Lays Housing Delay to Palmer

Much has been said about the defense housing program which some people believe to be bogged down with red tape. Many of the housing projects are constructed by the United States Housing and the Public Buildings Administration, both of which are under Federal Works Administrator John Carmody. No doubt exists about how the outspoken Carmody feels about the delay. He blames it squarely on Defense Housing Coordinator Charles F. Palmer, who tells Carmody when and where homes are to be built. Carmody is noted for his cracks but he never made one better than this:

"I used to think I knew what a 'coordinator' meant—someone to get people to work together. I didn't know it was spelled 'd-i-c-t-a-t-o-r.'" Yes, Carmody was talking about Palmer and he made his statement before the House Committee on Defense Migration.

Carmody went further to accuse Palmer of wasting time and money. He testified that a site for a Massachusetts project was forced on him by Palmer, that the site was more expensive than nearer sites, and that 30 days after the project was opened not a shipyard worker had moved into it. The project was to benefit the shipyard workers. Each time he questioned Palmer's judgment, Carmody testified, Palmer would whip out the executive order signed by the President which gave him (Palmer) full authority.

David Cobb, who formerly served in legal posts at SEC and Labor, has been appointed assistant general counsel to David Ginsburg at the Office of Price Administration and Civilian Supply . . . Navy Secretary Frank Knox has ordered his administrators to take off every other weekend, from Friday to Monday morning. Most of the key Navy officials are putting in health-killing hours and only in extreme cases are they permitted to take regular vacations.

Old Grievance Ended

A long-standing employe grievance is the deductions made at Federal institutions for quarters, subsistence and laundry, whether or not the employes used these facilities. Employe unions have made great gains in the 350 Federal institutions because of the inequities. Sometime ago the President ordered Budget Director Harold Smith to study the problem. The result will be a uniform policy on salary deduction for QSL in all Federal institutions on August 1.

Several thousand employes here will be benefited by the President's order, which will allow most employes to live off institution grounds, forbid charges for laundry, and will allow the Government to charge only for meals eaten. It is another step toward uniformity which the Budget Bureau is striving for. The only hitch is that the President's order makes the policy effective, subject to "availability of funds." However, the bureau is in a position to know the funds available.

J. Carl Wright, of Sentinel, Okla., has been appointed assistant manager of the Federal Crop Insurance Corporation . . . Civil Service experts say the President's hasn't the authority to bring the 7,500 temporary Census Bureau employes under Civil Service. Congress, they explain, must change the law before the workers can be brought under. U. F. W. A.'s Agricultural local has voted $50 for the defense of Helen Miller, suspended Labor employe . . . Navy plans to move the Marine Corps and its hydrographic and navigations bureaus to its new building in Arlington in September.

Howard Gray, Bituminous Coal chief, is limping. He hit his foot with an ax while chopping . . . Navy officials have stopped timing employe's lunch periods. The employes are given 30 minutes but they average nearly an hour because they have to stand in line so long for service. There are now nearly 12,000 employes in the Navy Building.

Camp Forrest Can-Can Dance

Camp Forrest, Tenn.—A private in the 181st Field Artillery came out for calisthenics without an undershirt. Suddenly, someone saw Gen. Ben Lear, a stickler for decorum, approaching in a car.

A buddy whispered "faint quick." The soldier swooned. The general's auto swept past. Then the private went to the hospital—with a sprained ankle.

Ain't Love Grand

Worcester, Mass. (A.P.).—George Akroyd, 34, of Marlboro, appeared in court to answer a charge of driving with one arm around a seatmate.

"Who was the woman?" asked Judge Frank Riley.

"My wife," replied Akroyd.

"How long have you been married?" "14 years."

"Case dismissed."

Schulte Asks D. C. Widen Milkshed

Urges Emergency Be Declared to Let Cream Be Imported From Entire U. S.

By Gerald G. Gross
Post Staff Writer

The District Commissioners today will have before them a recommendation by Representative William T. Schulte (Democrat), of Indiana that they declare a milk supply emergency exists here and authorize the importation of cream to relieve the situation.

Meantime, Schulte said he will introduce a bill which would permit importation of cream into the District "from any place in the United States under United States Public Health Service regulations."

Simultaneously the Indianan, for years a critic of the restricted Washington milkshed and opponent of the Maryland-Virginia Milk Producers Association, disclosed that he has written fresh letters to Secretary of Agriculture Wickard and OPACS Chief Leon Henderson condemning the impending milk price increase.

Sees Benefits to All

According to Schulte, adoption of his plan would benefit farmers and consumers alike and expedite extension of the Capital's 5-cent milk program to more needy, deserving families, and facilitate establishment of a penny half-pint project in low-income area schools.

The need for improving the District's relief milk program, both through better and greater distribution of nickel quarts and creation of a penny-half-pint program in the schools, has been described in articles appearing in The Post for the last ten weeks.

Since July 7 the Secretary of Agriculture has had under consideration oral testimony and briefs urging and opposing a producer price increase. The Maryland-Virginia Milk Producers Association is asking a cent-a-quart boost on all milk sold here in fluid form, including the Federally subsidized relief bottles for the indigent.

Stating that "Washington at the present moment is faced with the most dangerous shortage of milk the city has ever known," Schulte wrote Commissioner John Russell Young yesterday:

"The Commissioners . . . have plenary powers to meet this situation by declaring that an emergency exists in the District with respect to its milk supply, and pending action of the Congress on the bill which I propose to reintroduce, to permit the temporary importation of cream from U. S. Public Health Service centers into the District for use as fluid cream."

At present it is illegal to sell fluid cream—as opposed to that used in ice cream manufacture—here unless the dairy farm of its origin undergoes regular inspection by the District Health Department.

Sees No Danger

"I am sure," Schulte informed Young, "you will find that your health officials will tell you that it is possible to bring into the District of Columbia a high quality, pure, clean product from these United States Public Health Service milk markets, under the supervision of your own health department, without the slightest chance of injuring or endangering the health of the people of the District of Columbia."

In 1939 Schulte introduced a bill to effect this change but the measure died with that Congress.

"It is my present purpose," he wrote Commissioner Young, "in view of the proposed disgraceful increase in price which is being asked for in this market, and which will substantially raise the price of milk to the consumers, to reintroduce this bill in the present session of Congress and press for its early enactment into law."

He urged the president of the Board of Commissioners to take the matter up with Secretary Wickard. He added that if the city heads do not see fit to exerise their power and authorize temporary importation of cream, "I shall be compelled immediately to offer a bill in Congress to permit the importation of both milk and cream from any part of the United States subject to the United States Public Health Service regulations and to repeal the Milk Act of February 27, 1925."

In his letters to Wickard and Henderson, Schulte reaffirmed his opposition to any increase in producer prices for this milk marketing area.

Farmers now receive an average of 30 cents a gallon for their product, premiums included. They are asking four cents additional.

Schulte wrote Henderson: "I am very much afraid that unless something further is immediately done the Department of Agriculture is going to permit this situation to run wild and set an example to the rest of the Nation in the matter of increasing the price of this, the most basic of all food products."

Commissioners Expected to Refuse To Sell Building

The Commissioners today are expected to reject Budget Bureau proposals for sale of the District Building to the Federal Government unless assured of adequate quarters for all municipal offices in the new East Administration Building on Indiana Avenue Northwest.

An estimated 60 per cent of the new structure is now occupied by the Army Quartermaster Corps. The Commissioners are convinced that additional District agencies "could not squeeze in" unless the Army vacates. Portions of the Health Department were moved yesterday into the "last inch" of available space, it was reported.

Postlude

LaGuardia the Omnipotent Turns Director With SRO Sign Out at Last Sunset Concert

Big Ovation Given Him; Kindler's Return Brings Many Encores

By Ray C. B. Brown

Hans Kindler conducts the National Symphony Orchestra in the final summer concert at the Potomac Watergate on Thursday night. Guest conductor: Fiorello H. LaGuardia. Dancers: Nina Stroganova, Lilla Volkova and Vladimir Dukudovski. Program: "Semper Fidelis" (Sousa), "Hands Across the Sea" (Sousa), Toccata (Frescobaldi), Two Etudes (Skryabin), Excerpts from "Boris Godunov" (Musorgski), Symphony No. 4 in F minor (Chaikovski). Dances to music by Beethoven, Chaikovski, Albeniz, Strauss, Brahms and Offenbach).

At the hour when the National Symphony Orchestra began the final summer concert last evening at the Potomac Watergate, the crowd pressing for entrance past the ticket - takers was reminiscent of a subway rush in New York, whence had come Mayor Fiorello H. LaGuardia to conduct the patriotic opening numbers. The assemblage was the largest recorded for the open-air series, and no one can say with strict accuracy how many individuals made up the widely spread audience. The management had added 1,000 chairs to the reserved sections, and these were filled while every foot of the broad stone stairway was occupied, and the overflow extended beyond an observer's sight.

BROWN

It was a multitude festive and enthusiastic in spirit, despite a heavy and humid air unstirred by any wandering breeze. A clouded twilight gave way to a clear sky in which a half-moon shone and stars twinkled. The serried rows of auditors facing the river, and themselves a part of the picturesque scene, enjoyed to the utmost the auspicious close of a mildsummer season which was so fortunate as to have only one concert canceled because of stormy weather.

Mayor LaGuardia, discarding for the occasion his municipal authority, occupied the podium in his capacity as director of the office of civilian defense and as a director who has an inspiriting way with musicians. He was acclaimed with an ovation as he came upon the stage and quickly lifted the baton for the playing of the national anthem.

A moment later he surprised and delighted the vast audience by directing the opening theme of Beethoven's fifth symphony—the "V" signal which emphasized the significance of his presence. Then he proceeded to conduct with vigor two of John Philip Sousa's most stirring marches, each pertinent to the cause of victory in which the Nation is engaged: "Semper Fidelis" and "Hands Across the Sea." Prolonged applause brought him back several times and he received as well the congratulatory handclasp of Hans Kindler.

Dr. Kindler, who had been away since the opening of the series on journeys as guest conductor in New York and Toronto, was welcomed home with exceeding cordiality. His popular program began with an excellent arrangement of an organ toccata by Frescobaldi, which was played with a resonance that mounted to a brilliant climax. This was followed by LaSalle Spier's effective transcription of two piano etudes by Skryabin, and by Dr. Kindler's familiar coupling of three scenes from Musorgski's "Boris Godunov."

Three dancers—Nina Stroganova, Lilla Volkova and Vladimir Dokudovski—provided an interlude of colorful gyrations. Solos and pas de deux were presented to music of varied provenance, conducted by Francis Garzia. The items included an excerpt from Chaikovski's "Swan Lake," a Spanish dance by Albeniz, a waltz from Strauss's "Die Fledermaus," one of Brahm's Hungarian dances and a galop by Offenbach. The less said the better about the inept choreography used for the first movement of Beethoven's C sharp minor piano sonata, which was named "Moonlight" not by the composer but by that misguided critic, Ludwig Rellstab.

Dr. Kindler closed the concert formally with an eloquent reading of Chaikovski's fourth symphony. Formality, however, was something with which the auditors were not satisfied, and they insisted upon hearing more. Their demands were met by no less than six extra numbers: Strauss's "Voices of Spring," Bachs so-called "Air on the G String," the sailors' dance from Gliers ballet, "The Red Poppy;" Dvorak's tenth Slavonic dance, a passepied by Delibes, and the farandole from Bizet's "L'Arlesienne."

Jurors Express Their Appreciation To Visiting Judge

The jurors of Federal Judge T. Whitfield Davidson's branch of the District Court yesterday gave him a leather billfold as a token of their esteem.

Judge Davidson presides in the Northern Texas District, and has been in Washington on "loan" duty for the last month. In presenting the billfold, Mrs. Genevieve Fiore, 421 K Street Northwest, declared the Capital was fortunate in obtaining his services.

The Texas jurist conducted the trials of Transocean, the Nazi propaganda agency, and James R. McKenzie, 21, Negro, who was convicted in a sensational rape case this week.

Mrs. Fiore was chairman of the jurors' committee. Other members were Mrs. Elizabeth A. Newton, Mrs. Lee Ellen Yoelson and Mrs. Bertha E. Lempke.

Nun Wins Music Degree

The Washington Musical Institute yesterday awarded the degree of bachelor of music to Sister Mary Lillian, of the Order of Holy Cross Nuns at Dumbarton College, following a piano recital yesterday at the institute, 1730 Sixteenth Street Northwest.

Senate Opens Hearing Today On FBI Aid for District

The question of whether the Federal Bureau of Investigation should participate in District crime control—an issue since the murder last month of Jessie Elizabeth Strieff, War Department employe—will be aired in public hearings at 10 a. m. today before a Senate Judiciary Subcommittee.

Senator McKellar (Democrat), of Tennessee, author of one of two bills before the subcommittee, will be the first witness. He will be followed by officials of the Department of Justice, the District Government and the Metropolitan Police Department.

J. Edgar Hoover, director of the FBI, was invited to appear at the hearing, but he is expected to be represented by Alexander Holtzoff, special assistant to the Attorney General.

McKellar's bill would give the FBI authority to "detect and investigate" District crimes and, in effect, would establish the agency as another local police force.

The subcommittee also has under consideration a bill introduced by Senator Herring (Democrat), of Iowa, friend of Miss Strieff's family. This measure would enable the FBI to investigate certain types of felonies here.

Meanwhile, the District's own probe of its Police Department was temporarily sidetracked yesterday because Maj. Beverly C. Snow, Assistant Engineer Commissioner and chairman of the municipal investigation committee, was busy with other duties. The inquiry will be resumed today with questioning of additional precinct captains and other ranking officers.

Inquiry Told Of Law Client Solicitation

'Vicious Practice' Between Attorneys, Bondsmen Spreads, Witness Asserts

Bondsmen who work with lawyers on a split-fee basis have encouraged the spread of "case capping"—solicitation of clients—in the corridors of the District's Police Court, a House subcommittee was told yesterday.

Philip W. Austin, an attorney, appearing as a witness during hearings on a bill to consolidate the Police and Muncipal Courts, declared that the "real reason for the existence of this vicious practice" is economic. Struggling young lawyers, he said, are encouraged by bondsmen to represent their clients and it naturally follows that defendants for whom bonds are posted are solicited in behalf of practicing attorneys.

In the last three years, Police Court judges have lost 733 days that might have been devoted to court business while they argued over appointment of court personnel, Judge Walter J. Casey told the subcommittee. Because the four judges were unable to agree, he revealed, $3,406 allotted to the court for clerk hire went unspent during the same period.

Precedent at Hearing

The appearance of Chief Justice D. Lawrence Groner of the Court of Appeals, before the subcommittee—an unusual procedure for a high-ranking jurist—was another highlight of the hearing. Justice Groner joined six police and municipal judges in wholehearted indorsement of the bill.

The measure would merge the two courts and give power to administer them to a chief judge. It would create, also, an intermediate appeals court.

Representative Dan R. McGehee (Democrat), of Mississippi, subcommittee chairman, will start today to redraft the bill, but in no essential provisions will the measure he will report to the District Committee Monday differ from the bill prepared after years of study by leading lawyers, judges and the Department of Justice.

The merged court which would be given jurisdiction of civil suits up to $2,000 and, perhaps, $3,000—the present limit is $1,000—will relieve the jam of cases in the District Court, Justice Groner said. District Court, he declared, is a year and four months behind in its work.

Necessary, Says Groner

The bill would make it possible for District judges, under pre-trial procedure, to refer inflated suits to the new court, Justice Groner said.

"The appeals court," said Justice Groner, "supplies the need of poor litigants for an appeal by right. I feel that to leave people without the right of appeal is wholly wrong. Elimination of this section of the bill would be no reform at all. This reform, too long delayed, seems to me to be imperative."

Asked by Chairman Jennings Randolph, of the House District Committee, if he believed the bill, with certain perfecting amendments, is a "necessary reform," Justice Groner replied:

"Not only is there a need for this legislation, but a crying need and I feel that this bill will fill that need admirably."

"Can't Make Judge Work"

Speaking of the desirability of giving the chief judge authority to assign cases to nine associate judges of the proposed court, George C. Aukam, presiding judge of Municipal Court, declared:

"I don't believe you can make any judge work if he doesn't want to work. I am not referring to any particular court."

Police Court Judge John P. McMahon told the subcommittee that he disapproved of the proposal to give the chief judge authority to appoint a chief clerk who would name deputy clerks. He said he believes each judge should at least be able to name his own clerk.

Harlan Wood, representing the District Bar Association, complained that Police Court clerks have a habit of declining to "pitch in and help" when the judge to which he is assigned is absent.

"Justice costs too much money these days and one of the reasons is too many continuances," declared Representative Harry Sauthoff (Progressive), of Wisconsin. Municipal Judge Armond W. Scott responded:

"I am not going to continue cases arbitrarily, even if both sides agree to a continuance."

District Legionnaires Open Annual Conclave

The District Department of the American Legion last night opened its twenty-third annual convention at the Mayflower Hotel with a citation of its ideals by Federal Security Administrator Paul V. McNutt, who declared that "our ultimate defense lies in world freedom and in accepting our share of world responsibilities."

The legion's close ties to civic affairs in the District were symbolized by the presentation of citizenship awards to three prominent Washingtonians: Alvin W. Hall, director of the Bureau of Engraving; Eugene Meyer, editor and publisher of The Post; and Marvin M. McLean, a leader in activities of the Federation of Citizens Associations.

In presenting the award to Mr. Meyer, Thomas J. Kelly, chairman of the department's Americanization committee, declared:

"The press at all times has been the sword and the shield, and we in Washington, particularly the members of the department, know how much we owe to The Washington Post in supporting our efforts for the common good.

"Those of us who have observed the active and pronounced part The Washington Post has played in this community are particularly proud to present this citation to its publisher."

McNutt told the group of more than 600 delegates and visitors that "There is only one language the aggressors of the world understand. And we understand that democracy must be defended every day.

"America is a part of the world, and it makes a difference to Americans who runs the world. In our generation we can say that we don't intend to see Hitler running the world.

We'll Speak Softly

America, he said, "will speak softly, but we'll carry the big stick—carry it and use it if necessary."

Stronger language was employed by Judge J. Fred Johnson, of the Federal Communications Commission in his keynote address to the convention. He said:

"Let us not be deceived further. If history has a lesson for us, these would-be world conquerors are not going to be stopped until somebody stops them.

"If this Nation has not lost its idealism and self-respect let us proclaim the right and condemn evil and give no nation cause for doubt that we will translate our words into appropriate action when and if the security of this Nation and all it stands for is at stake. . . .

"The man who is exempted from the draft because he's engaged in essential national defense work is entitled to no more consideration than the man who was picked up by the seat of the breeches and dumped into the Army at $30 a month. . . .

"It is high time for the Government to say that treason may be committed at the work benches and on the assembly lines as well as at any other point on the vast battle front, and that any man who obstructs or induces others to obstruct this Nation in its great defense effort is guilty of treason and will be dealt with appropriately."

Sterling Sends Greetings

E. R. Sterling, national vice commander of the legion, said in greetings from national headquarters that it was hoped the present convention and any other legion gatherings would not ask for any resolution "which would in any way change the American way of life."

Department Commander William H. Hargrave delivered a brief opening address of welcome to the convention, urging that "we should redouble our efforts for national unity."

Greetings also were brought by Mrs. Helen M. McCabe, department president of the American Legion Auxiliary; Frank McCarthy, grand chef de gare of the District Society of the Forty and Eight, and Mrs. Catherine Crompton, Le Chapeau Departmental of the District Unit of the Eight and Forty.

Following the ceremony of the advance of the colors, Thomas R. Callahan led a memorial service for members of the department who died in the past year. Taps were played while the gathering stood silently at attention.

Music was furnished by Fort Stevens Post Drum and Bugle Corps. The Rev. Louis C. Vaeth, department chaplain, delivered the invocation and benediction.

At today's session, which begins at 8 p. m. at the Mayflower, nomination of officers will be held. Elections will be held tomorrow at the closing session.

D. C. Kiwanis Club Host to Scouts Touring U. S.

Life is just a lark for Scoutmaster Herbert Summers and six senior Scouts from Orange, N. J., who are "seeing America first" and really by auto enjoying it. The six boys, none of whom has ever been farther west than Buffalo, are Carmen DiSarno, 16, Sal Petrucelli, 16, Frank Manganelli, 17, Sam D'Alessio, 18, Larry Cimirro, 17, and John Parnucci, 16. The boys were guests of the Washington Kiwanis Club at a luncheon at the Mayflower yesterday.

Johnny, the smallest of the group, ventured the opinion that the "prettiest women" are in Jacksonville, Fla., and Michigan, the girls in Hollywood being "a bunch of phonies."

At the conclusion of their trip, the Scouts will have covered 11,000 miles.

"You meet people from all walks of life" said Sam, who was 18 during the course of the trip, "and it's really an education."

'Sergeant York' Proves One of Season's Great

Biographical Film Now at Both the Earle And Ambassador Theaters, Is Ably Acted By Gary Cooper and a Superlative Cast

"SERGEANT YORK" is the cinema's bugle call, awakening the Nation to the stuff of which its native stock is made and its passion for pursuing the American way of life.

It is more timely now than it would have been at any earlier period during the 22 years it has been a producers' dream, rather than a screen reality, and evades any charge of flagrant "propaganda" by expressing its every thought and action in terms of effective "theater" and engrossing entertainment.

This is true because "Sergeant York" is the only kind of picture the First World War hero, whose name it bears, would permit to be made from his life story and his personal diary. It could have been merely another "war picture." Instead, it is a study of character, environment, deep-rooted convictions and homespun romance, with the overseas battle scenes in the Argonne an incidental means of consummating all that has gone before. It is an honest, faithful and inspiring chronicle of what is meant by "Americanism" in its truest sense. Humor, gentleness, ruggedness and excitement all are in it.

Sowed Some Very Wild Oats

Alvin Cullom York is met first as a hell-raisin' young mountaineer, not averse to breaking up a church meeting with his brawling ribaldry and prankish gun-fire, but heartily ashamed of it afterward. He is a pretty wild fellow. So wild that his escapades are the juiciest topics around the cracker barrels in the village store, but not vicious enough to dull the interest of Gracie Williams, the belle of the Three Forks of the Wolf. Neither do Pastor Rosier Pile, who also runs the store, and Mother York despair of redeeming the fine qualities they know are inherent in the character of the youth. Through their exhortations, he "gets religion"—but not until he has been visited with Divine revelations that seem to bear out all that Pastor Pile and his mother have promised him would happen.

A new sense of honor and responsibility brings about an enormous reformation. This is pointed by the bickering for the bottom land that will permit York to marry Gracie, his struggle for the money to buy it, his chagrin at double-dealing, his great skill as a marksman and, finally, his failure to be relieved of military service as a conscientious objector. Once in the Army, his experiences continue to be marked by profound human interest and a great measure of humor, all culminating in the prodigious feat in the Argonne of wiping out a machine-gun nest and bringing in 132 German prisoners single-handed.

Cooper and Cast Excel

The entire development and movement of the story is more deeply marked by character than by incident. York's mental and spiritual turmoil always dominates the action. Gary Cooper, in the title role, encompasses the character with expressive and believable fidelity. It is as sound a portrayal as he has ever brought to the screen, accentuated by the splendid characterizations contributed by those who surround him in the cast.

Walter Brennan, the Pastor Pile; Margaret Wycherly, as Mother York, and Joan Leslie, the Gracie Williams, are flawless in their parts. Miss Wycherly's performance as the Spartan and almost wordless mother of a son in whom she imposed implicit faith, is particularly fine. Stanley Ridges, as Maj. Edward Buxton, who pointed the way to York's willingness to serve the colors; George Tobias, as "Pusher" Ross, former subway guard, with an unfailing sense of humor; Ward Bond, June Lockhart, Dickie Moore, now grown almost to manhood; Clem Bevins, of the squeaky shoes; Pat Flaherty, Erville Anderson and Robert Porterfield are among others who help to bring realism and conviction to a superlative film.

Stage Revue Added at Earle

Accorded a pyrotechnic premiere in the Earle Theater last night, "Sergeant York" was accorded rousing acclaim by one of the Capital's most distinguished audiences. Beginning this morning it will be shown continuously at both the Earle and Ambassador Theaters on an identical "road show" policy. Jesse L. Lasky, responsible for the production; Howard Hawks, the director; Sol Polito, for the excellence of his photography, and Max Steiner, for his music, all have reason to be proud of their achievement, as have Scenarists Finkel, Chandlee, Koch and Huston.

A brief stage revue is shown in connection with the film at the Earle, highlighted by the presence of Enrica and Norvello, dancers; Helene Faye, violiniste; Tony Donadio, graduate tenor of Catholic University, and the Roxyettes. But it is "Sergeant York" that will thrill the spectator with pride for weeks to come.

'Blossoms in the Dust,' Palace, Tender Tale of a Great Heart

Bringing a new-old topic of discussion to the screen in the guise of the biography of a great humanitarian, "Blossoms in the Dust," current at Loew's Palace Theater, will exert a tremendous appeal to those with any sense of responsibility to helpless babyhood. It tells its story in tones of exquisite Technicolor and emphasizes both pathos and drama but has scant time for "comic relief." "Blossoms in the Dust" is a picture which, in the large view, has no room for more than an occasional fleeting touch of humor.

It is the story of the life and work of Mrs. Edna Gladney, of Fort Worth, Tex., who has dedicated her lifetime to the succor of homeless foundlings and a vigorous war against the legal, social and statutory stigmata that attach to illegitimacy. Not a gay tale, it still is a recital of infinite gentleness and tenderness that is unfolded on the screen, made doubly poignant by the presence of many homeless babies in many of the scenes.

Mrs. Gladney, in the celluloid version of her life, begins her career in luxurious surroundings that prove the background of tragic events. Her foster-sister, apprised of her social status in most brutal fashion, takes her own life; tempestuously wooed by a breezy Texan, she marries him and their only child is killed in an accident. From these bitter experiences springs the natural impulse to champion the cause of those who came into the world under seemingly insuperable handicaps.

This championship entails not only the conversion of the Gladney home into a virtual orphanage, but a long drawn out battle with the legislators of the State to soften the laws applicable to those born out of wedlock.

All this is expressed in the picture through a succession of forceful but unenlivening developments that culminate in an act of great personal sacrifice.

Greer Garson, lent a new radiance in the revelations of natural-color photography, makes the character of Mrs. Gladney one of which that estimable woman might well be proud. She is sensitive, gentle and gracious, with a tremedous capacity for conflict when the occasion requires. Walter Pidgeon, as Sam Gladney, who does not live through the whole course of the narrative, either, gives new proof that he too long was relegated to roles of secondary importance. His portrayal is buoyantly conceived and excellently executed. Conspicuously able supporting performances also are contributed by Felix Fressart, as the kindly doctor; Henry O'Neill, as an understanding judge, and Marsha Hunt, who makes memorable the role of the charming young woman who could not stand "disgrace." Samuel S. Hinds, Kathleen Howard, Fay Holden and Marc Lawrence are among those who make secondary roles important.

GARY COOPER

in the title role of "Sergeant York," consummates the greatest piece of individual heroism performed by any civilian soldier in the First World War. This is the dramatic climax of the action. The romantic climax occurs later, when York returns home. "Sergeant York" now is on view at both the Earle and Ambassador Theaters, on a continuous run policy with no seats reserved

LEONARD LYONS

Broadway Parade

New York, July 31.

Last night George Jessel made an address in behalf of Chinese relief, at Lum Fong's restaurant on West Fifty-second. "When I was a boy," Jessel orated, "the only Chinese I knew were the peace-loving men who always conducted themselves with honor and dignity. They would deliver up our laundry only when we had the Tickee to give them. And so it is today. All China has the laundry America needs—the will to combat the Fascist aggression before it sweeps to the Pacific. Yes, they have the laundry," said Jessel, passing the hat around, "so let's give 'em the Tickee."

ANN SHERIDAN

Judith Anderson will return to Broadway in the fall, to play "Lady Macbeth" opposite Maurice Evans . . . Last night the contracts were signed for Fred Kelly to replace his brother, Gene Kelly, in the title role of the hit musical, "Pal Joey." Fred, who replaced Gene in "The Time of Your Life," was reluctant to follow suit in this case, lest he be typed as a mere substitute when his brother is unavailable. But Gene persuaded him that this would be an advisable move . . . Admiral Byrd will take to the lecture platform here August 14, to speak in behalf of the Fight for Freedom committee . . . George Brent leaves the hospital today, after a 2-month siege.

Wilkie Mahoney, who wrote the gags for "Panama Hattie" and "Caught in the Draft," was rewarded with a new job at MGM . . . A New York friend wrote to Wilkie, and complained: "You don't even tell me what's going on in Hollywood?" . . . "I'm the last one to know what's going on here," Mahoney confessed. "Lili Damita could be in the Cedars of Lebanon having a baby son, before I even knew that she'd had her first date with Errol Flynn."

The producers of Ann Sheridan's new picture are searching for a nine or ten-year-old girl, who resembles Miss Sheridan, to play a kid-sister role. Miss Sheridan, who once was voted, by the Harvard undergrads, as the actress least likely to succeed, would like the child selected for the role, to be the daughter of a Harvard grad . . . While George Jessel rehearses his new show next month, he'll play two weeks at Loew's State . . . Margaret Sanger will celebrate the twenty-fifth anniversary of her Planned Parenthood movement, in the fall. One of the features of that celebration will be a statistical report, revealing for the first time the exact influence her campaign has had upon the population of the Nation—mathematically speaking.

The high-comedy spot of the new Ginger Rogers picture, "Tom, Dick and Harry," occurs when Burgess Meredith is given a car-selling spiel by crack salesman George Murphy. This is how that scene came to be written . . . Paul Jarrico, who wrote the story, told Director Garson Kanin an outline of this scene. "Here's what you should do," Kanin advised. "Go downtown, to that auto agency which advertises '40 Selling Points.' Listen carefully to the salesman's spiel—the way in which he recites each point—and then put it into the script" . . . Jarrico thanked him, went downtown to the agency, heard the car salesman's spiel—and then drove back to RKO in the car the overconvincing salesman had sold him.

Eddy Out on Set, Dog Actor Cause

Nelson Eddy went to the dogs!

Well, it really wasn't as bad as it sounds. It was just a case of canine actors taking over the "Chocolate Soldier" set.

But Eddy has reason to remember it, for he carried body bruises. He was sprawled to the floor when a great Dane, his pet in the picture, knocked him down.

HEDDA HOPPER

Miss Goddard Can Act

Hollywood, Calif., July 31. Some people are born lucky, others fall into it. When I called at Paramount for a snip of news and ran into Cecil De Mille, he offered me a job. Lucky me! I'll play Paulette Goddard's aunt in "Reap the Wild Wind" and get this old puss done in Technicolor.

VICTOR MOORE

When I heard Cecil had given Paulette two 50-cent pieces, which is his reward for a fine performance, I asked him about it. He said, "She's not only a grand girl, Hedda, but she's a fine emotional actress. She's done scenes in this picture that astounded me!"

On "Louisiana Purchase" Bob Hope was getting such a kick out of working with Victor Moore and doing the craziest things with a set of handlebar mustaches, with Irene Bordoni looking as pretty as when I first saw her, on the sidelines teaching him a French accent. It does your heart good to see the attention being paid Bordoni and Victor Moore. Director Cummings sits there behind the camera and chuckles the whole day long and gets paid for it.

Charlie Feldman and Sylvia Fairbanks doing the night spots together, also Spence Tracy has come out of his shell since his return from the east . . . Jerry Mann says Ray Massey still looks so like Lincoln that he's now going around the studios freeing actors.

It's ironic that a week after Brenda Marshall and Bill Holden were married (and both had postponed operations for appendicitis, hoping to spend their honeymoon in the hospital having it done), Brenda got the best part in a year and is now in Canada playing opposite Jimmy Cagney. Not only their honeymoon, but operations, have again been thrown into the discard.

I wonder if Warners know how loyal their own producer Brynie Foy is. He turned down a fabulous offer from another studio without the blink of an eyelash

Senators Will Sift Objections To War Offices

A Senate Appropriations subcommittee last night took steps to learn why, in some official quarters, the War Department's $35,000,000 "dream" building is deemed a nightmare.

Senator Alva B. Adams (Democrat), of Colorado, chairman of the subcommittee that will have to vote on the project, announced that Budget Director Harold D. Smith will be called to the Capitol next Monday or Tuesday when the subcommittee reaches the building item in the eight billion dollar supplemental defense bill.

Frederic A. Delano, who met at with Smith to the White House to confer on the project with President Roosevelt, also is expected to be a witness, Senator Adams said. Delano is chairman of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission.

The "dream" building situation is this:

War Department officials are "enthusiastic" about it, Senator Adams said. They believe that by putting all their employes under one roof they will effect major economies and important gains in efficiency, but, as the Senator observed, they have had the advantage of presenting their side of the argument first.

Traffic Problem Staggering

Other Federal agencies, notably the Park and Planning Commission, are enthusiastic also, but in reverse. They foresee "imagination-staggering" problems, traffic so hopelessly jammed by the movement of 40,000 persons to the building that major alterations in District roadways and, more than likely, a new Potomac River crossing, will be necessary.

To provide access roads on the Virginia side—the building is projected for a 67-acre site on a part of the Arlington Experimental Farm—and to reconstruct roadways in the vicinity of the Lincoln Memorial alone would cost $7,500,000, it was estimated.

"I have no convictions one way or the other, and I you can be certain that the subcommittee will go into the matter with some care," Senator Adams declared.

An outline of roadways, sewer and water lines and other public works that officials believe, must be constructed if the building goes up will be in the hands of subcommittee members today. It will be in the form of a six-page letter from Delano. A copy of the letter also has been sent, it was learned, to Representative Clifton A. Woodrum (Democrat), of Virginia, chairman of the House Subcommittee that approved the project later voted by the House.

Roosevelt Approval Quoted

Woodrum yesterday struck back at criticism of the building with a prepared statement in which he made public a letter to him from Secretary of War Stimson advising that the project had the approval of President Roosevelt.

"I may say that an urgent need exists for this building and I hope that we may have the approval of the Congress for it at an early date," Stimson wrote. The letter was dated July 25, two days before the House voted funds for the building.

"The project was wholly and entirely the idea of the War Department, on their own initiative, without any suggestions whatsoever, so far as I know, from anyone in Congress," Woodrum said. He pointed out that the project had the unanimous approval of the Deficiency Appropriations Subcommittee, the Buildings and Grounds Committee, and when considered by the Rules Committee, "there was no dissenting voice."

Representative Everett M. Dirksen (Republican), of Illinois, one of the few in the House to fight the project, declared in a speech from the floor yesterday that he believed the War Department had consulted neither the Budget Bureau nor the planning commission.

"I believe this vindicates the position of the 15 who stood up in the Committee of the Whole against the proposal," he said.

Representative Howard W. Smith (Democrat), whose Virginia district embraces Arlington County, declared:

"I don't want to make the traffic problem more acute. It's bad enough now. But I can see no reason why we can't coordinate the building with my proposal for a new bridge or tunnel. The two undertakings should go forward as one project.

"There is no sense in putting up a big building over there and let the people who are going to work in it swim the river until a new bridge is built."

Representative Fritz Lanham (Democrat), of Texas, buildings committee chairman, declared that he didn't believe the building would "complicate" the traffic problem, that "in some ways, it will relieve the situation."

British Aid Ship Sabotaged at Pier

By International News Service

Philadelphia, July 31.—A former American freighter recently turned over to Great Britain for transport of war materials was reported tonight to have been sabotaged at its Philadelphia pier while loaded to the rails with a British-aid cargo.

The boilers and oil feeds were said to have been damaged in a manner which caused investigation by the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

Parks Board Gives District 3 Plots

Withholding any action on the proposed 35-million-dollar War Department Building in Arlington County, the National Capital Park and Planning Commission yesterday considered a number of lesser projects.

Thomas S. Settle, secretary, explained that the commission had authorized its legislative committee to deliver its views on the War Building plan. The committee consists of Frederic A. Delano, commission chairman, and A. E. Demaray, executive officer. Its report has been sent to the Senate and House Appropriations Committees, Settle said.

The planners approved transfer to the District Government of three small park triangles to facilitate traffic safety improvements; site plans for three defense housing projects, and locations for a library in Anacostia and an elementary school in Bradbury Heights.

They gave indorsement to a bill, now being drafted, which would permit the District Commissioners to rent out the new armory's drill hall when it was not in use by National Guardsmen, revenue to go into a fund for construction of a municipal stadium in the same vicinity.

The commission, Chairman Delano presiding, also heard Arthur Goodwillie, director of neighborhood conservation for the Home Owners Corporation, describe plans for a renovation study which his office will make in the Capital's Southwest section.

Two of the defense housing projects whose site plans were approved are in the District. The third is near Cabin John, Md. One, intended to house civilian employes of the Navy Yard, is of 350 units and is sponsored by the Alley Dwelling Authority. The other two are U. S. Housing Authority projects.

Japanese Liner Faces Further Tieup in Suit

By the Associated Press

San Francisco, July 31.—A $15,000 libel was filed against the Japanese liner Tatuta Maru late today, almost coincidentally with an announcement by Federal officials that legal obstacles had been ironed out to permit her to sail at noon tomorrow.

The suit was filed under admiralty law by Arnhold & Co., of New York City, because the firm had failed to get delivery of its portion of the ship's cargo—egg yolks, albumen and strawboard.

The Tatuta Maru also was carrying $2,500,000 in silk, $60,000 worth of tea and about $75,000 worth of furs, none of which was unloaded.

The vessel put in here yesterday after hovering off the Golden Gate for nearly seven days while negotiations were under way to obtain a guarantee it would be able to discharge its passengers, refuel and leave.

The customs office authorized the N. Y. K. Line to change its manifest so as not to require that the cargo be unloaded in this port. There was no immediate interpretation, however, as to what effect this change would have on the libel action.

R. D. Mackenzie, attorney for the New York firm, said the ship could not sail without posting bond in excess of the amount named in the suit.

One N. Y. K. official said that with Japanese credits frozen he did not know how bond money could be raised.

Prospective passengers lined the N. Y. K. office seeking passage to Japan. The office at first said a list of about 400 was expected. Later, however, when instructions came from Washington that each person could take out but $200, instead of the previously-announced $1,000, it was indicated the list might be smaller.

Russell Colgate Dies

West Orange, N. J., July 31 (AP).—Russell Colgate, 68, member of the board of Colgate-Palmolive-Peet, Inc., and a former chairman of the company founded by his father, the late Sidney Colgate, died tonight of a heart attack.

Bill Offered For New Court Building Here

Authorization for expenditure of $5,500,000 for a new Federal court building in the District is provided in legislation offered in the House yesterday by Chairman Fritz Lanham of the Public Buildings and Grounds Committee.

The building for which estimates were submitted to Congress several weeks ago, would be constructed on the site of the present General Accounting Office. The site is bounded by G, Third, F and Fifth Streets Northwest.

The bill would authorize the Architect of the Capitol to direct the construction and would order the General Accounting Office to vacate its building as soon as a new structure has been completed.

The authorization topped a list of four District bills dropped into the House hopper yesterday. The other bills would:

Direct the National Park Service to erect here a memorial to veterans of the Spanish-American War, the Philippine Insurrection and the Boxer Relief Expedition, introduced by Representative Smith (Democrat), of Washington.

Amend the Board of Public Welfare Act to increase its membership from 9 to 11 to provide two labor representatives, by Representative D'Alesandro (Democrat), of Maryland.

Permit seeing-eye dogs to enter Government buildings with their blind masters, by Representative Lanham.

French Nazis Due At Front in Week

Copyright by New York Tribune, Inc.

Paris, July 25 (Via Berlin) (Delayed).—The first contingent of 5,000 French volunteers to fight at the side of the Germans against the Red army will reach the front next week, this correspondent was informed today. The contingent is made up entirely of men of the Rassemblement National Populaire, militant "collaborationists."

Other units will follow as soon as they are equipped. The total of enlistments is now more than 15,000. The disclosure that the contingent was being rushed to the front followed criticism in the Paris press of "certain elements" at Vichy which sought to hamper the departure of the volunteers.

OIL HEATING USERS:
SAVE OIL FOR NATIONAL DEFENSE
SAVE MONEY ON HOME HEATING

An Inspection NOW May Mean Very Substantial Savings in the Cost of Heating Your Home Next Winter!

Here Are The Money-Saving Facts—
More than half the oil burners will be six years old, or older this year. Since even the newest equipment benefits by minor adjustments after a season of operation, it stands to reason that a tremendous saving can be effected on the older burners. The Federal Housing Authority, and the Dept. of Agriculture have proved that it is now possible to make scientific tests of oil-heating installations, with the aid of modern instruments, then make indicated adjustments to burners that are still in operating condition, and cut the average home oil consumption at least 20% or more!

You Can Save an Extra Tank of Fuel Oil in Your Own Cellar—
If your oil burner is in average condition and is tested and conditioned to government standard efficiency, the oil savings should total approximately 250 gallons . . . equivalent to the total capacity of one average residential fuel oil tank. So, in addition to saving money, you will have the double satisfaction of doing your part to cooperate with U. S. defense needs. You can still maintain the healthful temperature you desire in your home all winter. But the first step is to have a Defense Economy Test and adjustment of your oil burner in advance of the heating season.

The Government Is Doing All in Its Power to Assure Heat for Your Home—
Harold L. Ickes, Petroleum Coordinator for National Defense, recently stated he was primarily concerned with getting oil into homes, so people can keep warm next winter. However, the government has the right to except that you do your part by avoiding waste through increasing the efficiency of your heating equipment.

Oil Prices Are Being Controlled—
Leon Henderson, Administrator of the Office of Price Administration and Civilian Supply, has instructed refiners and marketers of petroleum products not to make any further advances in prices except "when this office has been given reasonable advance notice, and also has had the time to study the proposed increase on the basis of appropriate data indicating that costs of operation have increased." Your government and the oil industry are collaborating to avoid rising prices.

Get the Greatest Efficiency Out of Your Heating Equipment . . . Ask for Inspection NOW—
Perhaps you are one of those thrifty, far-sighted people who insist upon an annual inspection of your oil burner . . . if so you will surely cooperate and ask your friends to do likewise. But if you have never appreciated the economy of regular inspection, be assured that a pleasant surprise awaits you in the form of fuel savings . . . money in your pocket, that more than offsets the normally slight adjustments needed to bring your equipment up to prescribed Government standards of efficiency. The average home can expect to save more than a FULL TANK OF OIL DURING ONE HEATING SEASON! Whether your burner is new or old, it will pay you to invite this scientific inspection.

"WHAT ABOUT OUR OIL-BURNER?"

Here Are the ANSWERS to Your QUESTIONS:
Q. Our oil burner is only a year old. Should it be tested?
A. Yes, unless it bears a current certificate showing that it has been tested and approved as operating at Bureau of Standards CS-75-39 efficiency. Just as an automobile should be tuned and adjusted each season, if it is to save fuel, so should your oil burner. Measurement of the heat wasted up the flue, and of the CO₂ content of flue gases, will quickly tell whether or not adjustments can reduce YOUR oil bills.
Q. We only rent the house we live in. Should our oil burner be tested?
A. If YOU pay the oil BILLS, the possible savings will certainly justify you in having a Defense Economy Test.
Q. Who makes these scientific tests?
A. The trained service men of Fuel Oil—Oil Burner Distributors are qualified to make these tests.
Q. Can we save on oil and heating costs by insulation, storm sash and weather-stripping.
A. Yes. Proper insulation and storm sash can cut your oil requirements considerably.
Q. Is oil wasted by setting the thermostat too high?
A. Yes! For every degree which you set your thermostat above 70°, you are increasing your oil cost as much as 3%. An automatic clock thermostat regulator can save you oil by reducing temperature at night.

WILL YOU COOPERATE FOR A DEFENSE ECONOMY TEST?
Trained heating experts with modern testing instruments will thoroughly check and analyze every detail of your oil heating system, and provide you with a detailed report of any adjustments or repairs needed. In cooperation with the Government, The Oil Heating Industry has pledged itself to make any necessary adjustments and repairs at the lowest possible cost—many systems can be greatly improved by simple adjustments of existing equipment. Call your dealer today to discover how efficiently your heating plant is operating and what you can do to improve its efficiency.

Dupont Hotel Auditor Tells Committee Testimony at Inquiry Cost Him His Job

Telling a House Committee of alleged irregularities in the leasing of the Dupont Circle Hotel to the Government has cost the hostelry's night auditor his job, John J. Maguire, 3349 Baker Street Northeast, the auditor, told the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds yesterday.

On Wednesday a statement sworn to by him was read to the committee by Chairman Fritz Lanham, in which Maguire gave certain information in conflict with testimony presented earlier by Harry L. Newman, president of Dupont Circle, Inc.

Maguire told the committee he worked Wednesday night, but before he left, was informed by the manager, B. W. Anderson, that he need not return.

The night auditor's sworn statement on Wednesday said departing tenants having complaints had to sign papers releasing the hotel from responsibility before receiving rent rebates. To the affidavit was attached a letter to Maguire from the hotel corporation's secretary, dated July 3, revealing that the hotel had changed hands on that date and inclosing a $267 bonus check for "faithful and loyal services."

Earlier, Newman had told the committee the management was "absolutely" responsible to tenants and denied that the hotel had changed ownership since 1937.

Under questioning for nearly two hours yesterday was Clay J. Guthridge, chief of planning and space control for the Public Buildings Administration and who negotiated with Newman for leasing of the Dupont Circle Hotel, the objective being to convert it into a Federal office building.

Guthridge admitted that at no time, since May 7 when, he said, Newman first came to him to offer the 12-story building, did he check into Newman's authority to handle the deal.

According to Guthridge, the Public Buildings Administration sent Dupont Circle, Inc., the original and four copies of the proposed five-year lease, under whose terms the Government was to pay $209,004 a year for 150,000 square feet of space.

Not Signed By Government

The documents were filled out under date of July 1 over the signature of Harry Newman as president of Dupont Circle, Inc., said Guthridge, showing a copy to committee members.

Representative Hebert, of Louisiana, and other members stressed the point that the signed lease was dated July 1 and Newman was represented as the president, though he previously testified that he did not become head of the hotel corporation until July 3.

Guthridge, explaining that the Government has not yet signed the lease, emphasized that it contains a proviso that all tenants do not have to move out before Federal offices begin to move in. He said approximately 70 per cent of the space has been given up by residential tenants and 20 per cent has been taken over for offices.

Hebert read to Guthridge a notice, posted in the Dupont lobby early this month for residents to read, purporting to show that the Government solicited the hotel management for rental of the premises, that the operators first said "no" and that they finally capitulated only as a patriotic duty.

"Is that true?" the Louisianan asked.

Untrue, Guthridge Says

"No," replied Guthridge, explaining that his office did not go to the hotel first and that Newman never expressed any reluctance to lease the property, which had 602 residents in 342 apartment units up to July 5, when the management asked all tenants for their keys.

"I would not have approved it (the lobby bulletin);" said Guthridge.

Guthridge revealed that the Willard and Roger Smith Hotels have been offered for lease to the Government. He testified five million dollars is being spent annually for rented space in the District, and still there remains an office shortage.

When the Public Buildings and Grounds Committee, which will continue hearing Guthridge this morning, meets next Tuesday it will be to take up the Sabath resolution on decentralization of the Federal Government.

Boy, 5, Killed By 30-Ft. Fall From Zoo Cliff

Five-year-old Michael Fisher, of 3039 Macomb Street Northwest, died last night in Emergency Hospital after plunging 30 feet over a jagged cliff in the Zoological Park, where he was playing with two chums.

He was the only child of Dr. Charles Fisher, a medical officer at St. Elizabeth's Hospital, and his wife, Elizabeth. His two companions were Bill Wanbaugh, 11, and Pete Wanbaugh, 10, brothers, who live in the same Macomb Street apartment house.

The three boys were playing in front of their home when they decided to go to the Zoo. Michael had never been there before and was not allowed off the block without his maid. Bill and Pete said they told Michael to go in the house and ask the maid if he could go with them.

According to the maid, Jeannette Majors, 301 L Street Northwest, the boy did not ask her permission.

Climbed Steep Path

Instead, Michael and the two Wanbaugh brothers walked two blocks down Connecticut Avenue Northwest and went into the Zoo. After showing Michael the various animals the boys decided to visit the old quarry near the wolf cages.

The three boys climbed the steep path alongside the quarry until they reached the top, more than 30 feet above the jagged rocks below. Pete stepped over the edge of the cliff first to a precarious ledge where some old surveyor's markings can still be seen dimly. He wanted to show them to the other boys.

Next Bill Wanbaugh climbed down to the perch and finally little Michael began to edge his way down. Pete was holding Michael's legs trying to steady him. Suddenly Michael began to slip. For a second Pete held him but the weight was too much and Michael fell without a sound to the sharp granite rocks below.

The two Wanbaugh boys yelled to him and raced down the side path toward the pile of rocks where he lay unconscious.

First the two boys tried to carry the unconscious boy between them but found this was too awkward. Then they took turns half-carrying, half-dragging him while they shouted for help. After they had gotten about 100 yards up the path they could go no farther and laid him down beside a small stream while they bathed his face.

Bill ran up the road about a 100 yards and flagged a car driven by Frank Walters who took the boy to Emergency Hospital, where he died eight hours later.

Two years ago, according to Zoo police, another boy was injured fatally in a fall from the cliff, which is not protected by guardrails. A path skirts the top of the cliff to within 5 feet of the brink.

CONGRATULATIONS! MR. CONN! Eight years ago today, a suave and personable new manager took over the reins at the Ambassador Hotel. He was Russell A. Conn, under whose diplomatic and efficient guidance the Ambassador and its Hi Hat have prospered so tremendously. The atmosphere of friendliness and tact which pervades both the hotel and Hi Hat is the direct offspring of Manager Conn's influence . . . In case you're one of the few of Hi Hat's patrons who doesn't know Russell Conn, he's the tall gentleman who looks like Paul Lukas, of the movies, and is usually around the Ambassador lobby keeping an attentive eye on all that happens.

Maintaining this difficult reversed stance, he stands almost on his head and while continuing his juggling, drinks a huge glass of red liquid, also lights a cigarette at a candle. If that beverage should happen to be potent, Delmar rates it and probably needs it. His act is one of the most difficult and exhausting you'll see . . . The new "Dance Cocktails" wind up the show with a girl circus.

RING CHAMPS OR CHUMPS?

Perhaps you haven't noticed it, chums, but it has been a rough summer for fight champions. Every time a champion has poked his nose into a ring, somebody either licks him or comes very close to it, Joe Louis unexcepted. Two champions saved their titles only because they were fighting non-title bouts.

POVICH

The prize fight industry is crawling with uncrowned champions. The latest is George Abrams, who has licked Middleweight Champion Billy Soose three times and still doesn't own Soose's title. Abrams further complicated the muddled middleweight situation by beating Soose in an overweight match. Soose won the title earlier in the summer from Ken Overlin, losing the fight but getting the decision.

Uncrowned Champion Abrams has company in two colored lads, Bob Montgomery of Philadelphia, and Ray Robinson of the Harlem. They beat the co-champions of the lightweight division, but didn't win any titles because the champions had the foresight to make them come in overweight. But Montgomery is champion of Lew Jenkins, who holds the New York version of the lightweight crown. He all but macerated Jenkins in a recent bout at Philadelphia. Robinson disposed of Sammy Angott, who is recognized as champion wherever Jenkins isn't. He licked Angott, N. B. A. titleholder, soundly.

Joey Archibald, who holds the New York version of the featherweight title, has anything but a clear claim to the championship. A Mexican named Ritchie Lemos knocked out Pete Scalzo last month and won the N. B. A. featherweight crown, but that isn't all that complicates Archibald's claims. In his last two fights Archibald has been licked by lads named Lew Transparenti and Bob (Poison) Ivy. He's something of a sure-shot to lose his title, incidentally, when he meets Chalky Wright here later this month.

Vivic Supposed to Be a Standout

Gus Lesnevich, the lightheavyweight champion, won his title by default. He inherited it after a fashion when Bill Conn moved into heavy ranks and kissed off the lightheavy crown. Lesnevich was supposed to fight Jimmy Webb, the Texan, in a bout that was supposed to give one or the other something of a clear claim, but that's out. Webb got himself knocked out in two rounds the other night by Pittsburgh's latest flatic sensation, one Moses Brown, a colored boy.

Until this week, only two men owned clear-cut claims to titles. They were Joe Louis and Fritzie Zivic, who held the welterweight crown. Zivic was supposed to be the stand-out champion of his time, what with Louis' title being badly tarnished in his bouts with Buddy Baer and Billy Conn. Zivic had given Henry Armstrong a return bout after winning Armstrong's title, and this time he knocked Armstrong out. He took on Bummy Davis at New York last month and disposed of that threat to his title by giving Davis a consummate pasting for 12 rounds.

Zivic was supposed to be tops. He was a 4-to-1 favorite to beat Red Cochrane, a well-beaten New Jersey welterweight, the other night, and couldn't lick him. Zivic lost his title unlike Soose, Jenkins and Archibald who wouldn't risk it. The welter division is skidding toward a muddle of its own, incidentally. Cochrane got his draft papers the day after he won the title and he may take it into the Army for the duration, leaving the division very much unsettled.

Joe Louis' Crown Tarnished

Joe Louis, as we were saying, hasn't escaped the tough summer. The Brown Bomber is no longer a stand-out in the heavyweight class. He started losing caste when clumsy Abe Simons went 13 rounds with him at Detroit and the Louis reputation wasn't exactly enhanced when fat Tony Musto lasted nine rounds with the champion last spring. Then came the bout with Buddy Baer in Washington and Louis was dumped on his regal haunches in the first round for a seven-count. He had to get up off the floor to win from the incredibly slow-moving Baer who was a 1-to-10 underdog.

The Billy Conn fight just about dispatched any ideas that Louis is unbeatable. Conn would be the champion today if he were content to win the title on points after piling up a lead in the first 12 rounds. Whether it was his Irish zeal, his temper or plain dumbness may never be known, but Conn elected to slug it out with Louis in the thirteenth and was slugged out two seconds before the round ended.

The heavyweight situation is such that the next time Louis gets into a ring with Conn, he may go in as the underdog. Meanwhile, Louis has a fight coming up with Lou Nova next month and he will go to the post the shortest-priced favorite of his career. Within the past week, Louis has back-tracked on his pronouncement that he was tired of the fight business. For the first time in a year he has had a month to himself without training for some fight and he says he feels like fighting again. If he isn't kidding himself, he should beat Nova.

Little Says Marines Unable to Play Hoyas

Leathernecks Lack Strength to Meet Hilltoppers; All-Star Team Suggested

By Jack Munhall

Maj. Gen. Louis McCarty Little, commanding the Quatico Marine base, yesterday wired The Post his regrets that the Leathernecks would be materially unable to accept an offer to meet Georgetown University November 1 in a football game for benefit of the U. S. O.

Georgetown, through Rome Schwagel, graduate manager of athletics, announced Monday that it would volunteer its eleven for a charity game anywhere in the East against any United States Service eleven, all proceeds to go to the U. S. O.

Maj. Gen. Little, in answering a wire from The Post asking if Quantico would be willing, declared:

"Am sorry that Quantico Marines will not have team comparable to Georgetown and regret unable to accept your fine offer."

2 to 1 Edge

The Marines had been on Georgetown's preferred list of opponents for two reasons. One was that the Leathernecks hold a 3-1 edge over the Hilltop in four previous football games, and the second was that at least two former Georgetown grid stars are now at the marine base.

Schwagel, informed of Little's decision, said that he would take

By the Associated Press

St. Michaels, Md., July 31.—The "Poor Man's Regatta," one of the largest water sports events on the Eastern seaboard, will open tomorrow with 79 boat races crammed into two days of competition.

Officials of the Miles River Yacht Club said they expected some 1,500 boats, including sailing craft, runabouts and hydroplanes, to enter the twentieth annual regatta.

A special work-boat race for watermen who earn their living by oystering, fishing or crabbing will be held tomorrow. A special event also will be held for fishermen from Tilghmans Island.

Sarah Cooke Bows in Upset At Maidstone

By the Associated Press

East Hampton, N. Y., July 1.—Louise Brough, an 18-year-old California miss equipped with a stinging service and a forehand to match, knocked Mrs. Sarah Palfrey Cooke, of New York, out of the Maidstone Club tournament today by defeating the veteran star, 6—2, 6—4, in the quarter-final round.

The Los Angeles girl, holder of the national girls' championship, broke Sarah's service twice in gaining a 4—0 advantage in the first set, and at one point had a string of ten straight points. Mrs. Cooke led at 3—0 in the second set, but Louise tied it at 4—4 and then engineered another service break for the match.

Another upset marked the upper-bracket play when Hope Knowles, a Philadelphian with a national ranking in squash racquets, eliminated Virginia Wolfenden, of San Francisco, 3—6, 6—4, 6—1. Miss Wolfenden is the Nation's fourth-ranking player.

Pauline Betz, of Winter Park, Fla., and Dorothy May Bundy, of Santa Monica, Calif., gained the lower bracket semifinal. Miss Betz, the national indoor champion, defeated Mary Arnold, of Los Angeles, 5—7, 6—0, 6—0, while Miss Bundy beat Shirley Catton, of Alameda, Calif., 6—2, 7—5.

Browns Whip Red Sox, 16-11, Then Lose, 4-1

By the Associated Press

Boston, July 31.—After dropping their seventh straight game to the lowly St. Louis Browns by a 16-11 margin, the Boston Red Sox rallied behind Rookie Tex Hughson's six-hit pitching today to gain a 4-1 triumph in the nightcap, which was called after the first half of the eighth inning because of darkness.

The opening game was a weird slugfest that lasted 3 hours and 11 minutes. The Browns, who belted five Red Sox pitchers for 14 hits while working them for 12 passes, opened and closed in decisive fashion. Roy Cullenbine sent them off to a flying start in the first inning by slamming Dick Newsome for a homer with the bases loaded.

Red Sox Score 6 Runs

The Red Sox, aided by Ted Williams' first grand-slam homer of his major league career, his twenty-first home run of the season, staged a six-run rally in the seventh to pull into a commanding 11-7 lead. Thereupon, the Browns set upon Nelson Potter for three runs in the eighth and then pounded Mickey Harris and Jack Wilson for six more tallies in the ninth.

Hughson limited the Browns to a half-dozen singles in the abbreviated second game and Rick Ferrell collected three of them. Meanwhile the Sockers clouted Bob Muncrief for nine hits, including a Bobby Doerr homer and double. With a four-run lead, Hugden eased up in the eighth and tossed away his chances for a shutout by giving successive singles to Ferrell, Muncrief and Don Heffner.

The Red Sox sent a revamped

Last Respects Paid Jones, Noted Coach

By the Associated Press

Los Angeles, July 31.—Southern California said goodby today to Howard Jones.

Rich and poor, influential and humble, they jammed first Mtthodist Church in Hollywood to pay last respects to the memory of the late head coach at the University of Southern California whose name had been a by-word in the American sport of football for nearly three decades.

Some of the vast throng had been closely associated with Jones during his 16 years as head coach at the university. Most of them were merely admirers of Jones, the man, and Jones, the coach of the school's great era in football.

The body will be sent tomorrow for burial in Middletown, Ohio. Accompanying it will be Howard's younger brother, Tad, famous as a one-time star and later coach at Yale University, and by Howard's 23-year-old son, Cleark.

Eulogies were read. Dr. Glen Randall Phillips, pastor of the church, said "Howard Jones never forgot that while he was also building great teams he was also building character."

"In his guidance of young men and by his own example, he has made a contribution that can neven be forgotten." This from Willis O. Hunter, long the athletic director at U. S. C.

Ol' Pete Released From Hospital

New York, July 31 (AP).—Grover Cleveland Alexander, 54-year-old former National League pitching star, was released today from Bellevue Hosptial, where he was taken last Friday morning suffering from a head injury, apparently the result of a fall.

Alexander's wife called for him at the hospital and said he would continue under the care of their family physician.

At first it had been feared "Old Pete" had suffered a fractured skull, but hospital authorities said X-rays showed no definite fracture though there had been a hemorrhage in the brain.

Detroit Bows to Yanks, 6-3, 5-0, in Twin Bill

League Lead Increased to 12 Games; Keller Hits 26th Homer With Two On

By the Associated Press

New York, July 31.—The pent-up power of the New York Yankees flowed over the Detroit Tigers today for a double-header victory, 6 to 3, in 13 innings and, 5 to 0, in 8.

Charley Keller hit his twenty-sixth home run with two on to decide the first game after the Tigers tied the score with two runs in the ninth.

Joe DiMaggio hit his twenty-fifth round-tripper with two on in the second session, which was curtailed by darkness, and also singled in both contests to stretch his current hitting streak to 14 games and 70 out of his last 71.

Pitching Masterpiece Ruined

The marathon first affair began as a gripping pitching struggle between Marius Russo, the Yanks' young southpaw, and wily old Buck Newsom, of the Tigers. For six innings Russo did not allow a hit or a man to reach first base.

It was an abbreviated masterpiece. For in the seventh he gave three singles and a run to the Tigers and in the ninth was driven from the mound when Tuck Stainback and Barney McCosky opened with two stinging doubles for a second run. John Murphy came in and served a single to Pinky Higgins to tie the score.

The Yanks were always threatening to break their bonds without ever quite shaking loose. They scored once in the first inning on two singles and a double by Keller. Then Bill Dickey was purposely passed to load the bases only to have Joe Gordon ground out.

Keller Clouts Homer

They got another in the sixth on three singles and Gordon grounded into a double play. They scored on two singles and a sacrifice in the seventh and loaded the bases on Tom Henrich's double and an intentional walk to DiMaggio. But Keller's long fly was caught. They loaded the bases with one out in the ninth on Henrich's third double, another intentional pass for DiMaggio and an error, driving Newsom out, but didn't score.

This power proved irresistible,

Braves' Rally Falls Short, Bucs Win, 9-8

By the Associated Press

Pittsburgh, July 31.—The Boston Braves scored seven runs in the eighth and ninth inning today, but failed by one to catch up with the nine runs knocked home by Pittsburgh's still hot batters, and the Pirates won, 9 to 8.

The last game in a three-game series ended with Boston's tying run dying on second. Sixteen hits by the Pirates gave Pittsburgh its nine runs in the first six innings.

The Braves ousted Pitcher Johnny Lannning with five runs in the eighth and sent Lloyd Dietz packing with two more in the ninth. A Boston substitute, Al Roberg, batted in four runs with a single and a double. Pinch-hitter Frank Demaree posted a triple with the bases filled during the mighty eighth inning splurge.

Boston's Dick Errickson gave up the mound early after Pittsburgh gathered three runs in the second inning. Four more were marked up in the fifth off Art Johnson with Stu Martin's pop fly single, sending home three runners. Van Robays and Martin each got three hits and Martin drove in five runs. Wasdell Hits 3-Run Homer In Fourth

Fitzsimmons Gets Credit for Victory; Brooklyn Now Two Games Out of First

By the Associated Press

St. Louis, July 31.—The Dodgers turned on the power and Freddy Fitzsimmons, fat and 40, pitched well in relief as Brooklyn defeated the St. Louis Cardinals, 9 to 5, today and pulled back within two games of the National League leaders.

Brooklyn held control and it was Billy Southworth, instead of Leo Durocher, who had most of the pitching troubles even though Whit Wyatt, on whom the Dodgers had pinned their chances of evening the series, was batted out in the third.

That two-run inning which, added to a single counter in the first matched Brooklyn's three-run second inning, was the last serious threat of the Cards. Jim Wasdell's three-run circuit in the fourth capped a four-run frame which added to a pair of runs in the seventh made up the Brooklyn scoring.

Camilli Homers

Dolph Camilli smacked out his nineteenth home run to start the Dodger second. Lew Riggs followed with another. Herman Franks was safe on Frank Crespi's error and Peewee Reese singled to center to send Franks to second and starting Cardinal Pitcher Harry Gumbert to the showers. Wyatt drove in Reese with the third run of the inning after Franks had been picked off second and with the bases loaded and two out Wasdell flied to Terry Moore.

Kemp Wicker, who replaced Wyatt, lasted only two-thirds of an inning, giving way to a pinch hitter in the fourth. Fitzsimmons allowed only three hits in six innings, including Jimmy Brown's sixth-inning triple which scored a run and Terry Moore's seventh-inning homer. He also executed a perfect squeeze-play sacrifice in the seventh to drive in a run.

Estel Crabtree, who had hit safely in 12 of his last 15 trips to the plate as a pinch hitter and was a chief cog in the Cards' 6-to-4 victory yesterday, failed today. After Brown doubled in the eighth he batted for Martin Marion and flied to Dixie Walker.

The two clubs have played 13

Red Cochrane Takes Army Exam At Hillside Board

By the Associated Press

Hillside, N. J., July 31.—Freddie (Red) Cochrane, the new welterweight champion, flexed his muscles and opened his mouth wide today for three draft board physicians and a dentist.

Fred Haefle, chief clerk of the draft board, said it was "quite likely that Cochrane would be called for induction sometime in September" provided he passed the physical examination.

The champ has said he would claim no exemption.

Howard Shanks, Former Nats' Star for 9 Years, Dies of Heart Attack in Pennsylvania

Fielder-Third Baseman Stricken at Pa. Home Was Real Estate Head

Howard Shanks, a fixture at left field and third base on Washington baseball teams for the nine seasons from 1912-1920, inclusive, died at his Monaca, Pa., home late Wednesday night, it was learned here yesterday.

Shanks, esteemed by Washington fans of the last generation as one of the Nat's better ball players, expired suddenly from a heart attack while entertaining friends on the porch of his home. Death came 40 minutes after he was stricken.

Forty-nine years old, Shanks had not complained of any illness. He is survived by his wife, the former Wilhelmina Wagner, whom he married in 1915.

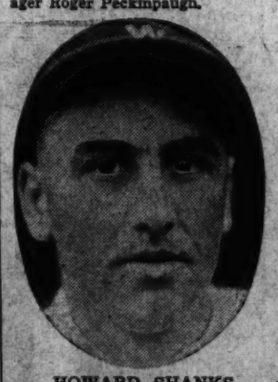
Shanks served with the Yankees and Red Sox as a third baseman after being traded by Washington in 1920, and played two years in the minors with Louisville before returning to the big leagues as a coach at Cleveland under Manager Roger Peckinpaugh.



HOWARD SHANKS

Shanks' career with the Washington club dated from the year in which Clark Griffith assumed the management of the Nats in 1912, and ended when Griffith retired as manager in 1920.

Ranked With Johnson In Washington Game; Once Lone .300 Hitter

He was an integral figure on the 1912 Washington team which surprised the league by finishing second. The Nats of that year were barely beaten for the pennant by the Red Sox. Shanks came to the Nats when Griffith determined upon a rebuilding process. Trading such veterans as Gabby Street, Griffith brought Chick Gandil from the Buffalo club and Shanks from the Youngstown team of the Middle Atlantic League.

Shanks was rated with Walter Johnson, George McBride and Clyde Milan as the outstanding players of the Washington club during the years from 1912-20. In one season, he was the only .300 hitter on the team, and his versatility enabled him to play the infield in emergencies. He had one of the league's most-feared throwing arms among outfielders.

After being traded by the Yankees to the Red Sox in 1922, Shanks played his last season in the majors as a third baseman in 1923.

Nats and Indians Rained Out; Chisox Invade for 3 Games

Leonard to Pitch Today; Aderholt To Play Third Base

The Nats are in the cellar but it is all very interesting. Actually they are only four games out of sixth place, and fifth place is only 7½ games distant. The first division, in fact, is only 8½ games away. The Nats are in a dog fight for the last five places in the league standing.

Washington moved into the cellar yesterday without moving a muscle. What happened was that the Browns, who were tied with the Nats for last place, moved out on them by beating the Red Sox with a six-run ninth inning at Boston yesterday. The Nats didn't play. Their game with the Cleveland Indians was postponed because of a shower before game time. It was called off chiefly on account of a more profitable double-header on the Indians' next trip to Griffith Stadium.

Today the Nats are in a position to do themselves some good. They commence a three-game series with the fifth-place White Sox. Dutch Leonard, originally scheduled to face the Indians yesterday, will go to the mound. Leonard has been

McCoy's 4-Run Homer Leads Athletics Into First Division

Jack Knott Wins Tenth Game, 9 to 2

A's Replace Chisox In Fourth Place; Knott Wins Third Game Over Ex-Mates

By the Associated Press

Philadelphia, July 31.—Paced by Benny McCoy's fourth-inning home run with the bases full, the Athletics trounced Chicago, 9 to 2, today to replace the Sox in fourth place—the first time in eight years the A's have been in the first division of the American League race this late in the season.

McCoy's home run—a clout that cleared the right-field wall and shattered a window of a new car parked outside Shibe Park—was the payoff blow, and Athletics' Pitcher Jack Knott coasted to his tenth victory of the season thereafter. The triumph was Knott's fourth in a row and his third of the season over the Sox, who traded him to the Athletics last winter.

Sox Score First

Chicago took a short-lived lead in the first on Don Kolloway's single, a walk to Joe Kuhel and Al Brancato's error that filled the bases. Taft Wright hit into a double play, but Kolloway scored.

The Athletics came back in their half to score three times on successive singles by Brancato, Wally Moses, and Benny McCoy, Dick Siebert's single scoring Brancato and Moses and Sam Chapman's outfield fly scoring McCoy. They added another on Bob Johnson's single, followed by Siebert's double with two out in the third.

A's Fill Bases

In the big fourth, Frankie Hayes started off with a hit and Pete Suder singled. Jack Knott hit to Kolloway but Tom Turner dropped the ball at home to permit Hayes to score. Brancato advanced Knott with a sacrifice and Moses walked to fill the bases and set the stage for McCoy's home run.

The Sox scored their second run in the sixth when Luke Appling reached second on McCoy's wild throw after forcing Wright, then scored on Brancato's error.

Phils Pound Three Hurlers, Beat Cubs, 7-2

By the Associated Press

Chicago, July 31.—The Phillies knocked Charley Root out of the box during a three-run second inning today to beat the Chicago Cubs, 7 to 2, and earn an even break in the four-game series.

The Phils collected 13 hits off Root, Jake Mooty and Vance Page, while Johnny Podgajny held the Cubs to six hits, three of which they made in the seventh inning when they scored their only two runs.

The Phils scored two in the first inning on three hits and then assumed a five-run lead in the second with three more runs on as many hits and a Cub error.

The Cubs, already short on pitching talent, learned today they would be without Claude Passeau's services for ten days.

An X-ray examination revealed that Passeau suffered a broken rib last Saturday when he slid into second base, colliding with Bill Jurges, New York Giants' shortstop.

Tonight's contest will bring out such outstanding stars as Mrs. Spates, Mary Magnotto, Rita Pitts, Mabell Hering and Eleanor Bark for Spillway while the Brooklanders will depend on Lois Gladding, Martha Biggs, Vickie Croggon, Ruth King and Evelyn Sebastian. Spectators are ivited.

Ed Barker is the proudest man in the Inter-Departmental League at Lucky Strike for he is the possessor of his first 400 set as well as the highest single of his career, a smashing 178. Barker, a member of XYZ team, posted games of 113, 127 and 178 to total a splendid 423 and lead his mates to a whitewash over the Interior crew. The big string featured a triple-header strike and five spares in the last game.

The Fort Davis Independent League at Eddie Espey's drives was led by Shields, Tom Boorde's Esso Station, with a 151 single and the splendid 400 set marked up by Bennie Cruz, Naiman's Photo. The latter's count helped his team to three straight over Hillcrest Pharmacy and to team highs of 615 and 1,736 as well. Meade's 389 for Brennan & Porter Realty enabled his boys to score a sweep over Skyland Liquor and Avenue Grill took two from A. Izzo Contractors despite Edward's 384 set for the latter. Ulrich, Pincus Grill, rolled a 342 set to help take the odd contest from Carlin Creamery in spite of Ralph's 343 for the losers.

Giants Lose To Reds, 6-5, 5th Loss in Row

By the Associated Press

Cincinnati, July 31.—The New York Giants, making an unhappy tour of the West, dropped their fifth straight game and eighth in nine starts today when Chuck Aleno hit a pinch single with the bases loaded in the ninth inning for a 6-to-5 Cincinnati victory.

The two teams battled neck and neck most of the way. When the Giants tallied a run in the second on two singles and an error, the Reds rapped back with three singles and a run. When the Giants tore loose three in the third on two singles, a double by Babe Young, and an error, the Reds matched them with three on five hits and an error.

The Giants got another run in the seventh on two singles and an error it appeared they might make this one stick. But Walter Brown walked the first two Cincinnati batters in the ninth. Cliff Melton came in the purposely sased another after Bill Werber had sacrificed. Then Aleno batted for Lonnie Frey and singled two runs across.

Carr Bows, 6-4, To Kavakos At Ballston

Kavakos Grill maintained its first place and undefeated Capital City second-half status last night at Washington Softball Stadium by turning back a determined Carr Brothers and Boswell ten, 6-4. "Cannonball" Jack Smith was touched for seven safeties by Carr Brothers but managed to weather sixth and seventh inning storms. Doug McLaren, Carr Brothers hurler, gave up only six hits. The victory was the fourth in a row for Kavakos.

Pepco headed Census, 2-1 in the National Night League nightcap despite the three-hit hurling of Milt Hoffman, who unfortunately, gave up the three safeties, singles by Holst and Huff and a double by Beach, in the fourth inning when Pepco tallied its pair of runs. In the final frame Census scored once and had the bases filled but Ken Thomas recorded his twelfth strikeout to end the game. Hoffman fanned 11.

Tonight the Washington Softball Stadium All-Stars will meet Baltimore Gas and Electric ten in a double-header starting at 8 p. m.

Gesell Returns For Midget Race

Ernie Gesell, leading Eastern race and money winner, who dominated this past Tuesday night's abbreviated program at the West Lanham (Md.) Speedway, will be back in the starting field Tuesday night when midget automobile racing is continued at 8:30 o'clock.

Gesell recently passed Mike Joseph as the leading money winner at Lanham and has outclassed the field with plenty to spare in three of four appearances.

On the Line

—With CONSIDINE

New York, July 31.—Georgie Abrams won his third leg on Billy Soose at Madison Square Garden Wednesday night. That gives him permanent possession of Soose. He can now have his name engraved on Billy and display him on his mantlepiece.

CONSIDINE

Georgie may never get around to winning the middleweight title, for he is caught in an almost unparalleled contractural snarl. But he's certainly the middleweight champion of Soose.

Georgie won Wednesday night by what we thought was a slim, but adequate margin. It was the third victory over Billy. But a crowd that seemed to have come into the steam-heated Garden just to boo Billy, stayed to give him a hand for the good showing he made against his squat, bouncy, durable nemesis. In more respects than one, it was Soose's best New York fight, even though he was blowing the decision.

Abrams now finds himself in a weird jam. He is a stablemate of Ken Overlin, over whom Soose won the title. When Soose signed to meet Overlin he had to promise to give Ken a return bout in the event he won. Billy is having trouble with his weight now. He is growing into the light-heavyweight class, as his 170 pounds of heft, at the start of his recent training siege, indicates, so-o-o-o-o—

No Intramural Battles in This Barn

Here's the rub: It may take so much out of Soose to get down to 160-pounds, to defend his title against Overlin this fall, that Overlin will whip him and take back the title. In that case, Stablemate Abrams, who has beaten Soose, the current champ, three times without winning a title, will have to be shelved. It is, of course, against all boxing law for stablemates to fight each other—at such well-known stablemates as Overlin and Abrams. If Abrams were not so well known, Manager Chris Dundee might "sell" him to another manager and the two men might some day meet. But any transfer of Abrams' stable affiliations at this time is out of the question. The fellow will just have to wait some more . . . which is what he has been doing for a long time.

In Abrams' locker room after the fight, Dundee, who finds himself in the peculiar spot of having two commodities with outlet room for only one, indicated that a deal was brewing whereby Overlin would be shelved, instead of Abrams. All this is a little too complicated to go into, but the germ of this idea is that Abrams, in exchange for the privilege of getting first crack at Soose's title, would give Overlin a good cut of his purse for stepping aside.

From our knowledge of Overlin, the gay gob might find this highly acceptable, even though it deprived him of his right to another crack at Billy. Ken has been around a long time, fighting for his coffee and cakes. It would appeal to the gay former gob to start getting paid for not fighting.

All of which should confuse any normal person completely. The thought of still another Soose-Abrams fight is slightly appalling, just at the moment. Such a fight would begin to encroach on the consecutive battling title now held jointly by Ted Kid Lewis and Jack Britton, and Jiggs and Maggie.

A poll of the greybeards at the Garden ringside brought out that the only parallel of the curious case of Stablemates Overlin and Abrams was the case of Jim Corbett and Jim Jeffries. Both were managed by Bill Brady. Brady hired Jeffries as a sparring partner for Corbett, and the boilermaker looked so good in workouts with Gentleman Jim that Brady put him under contract. It became apparent after a short time that if anyone was going to beat Corbett it was his stablemate. They didn't worry much about the possibility of collusion or monopoly in those days. For the two men met—and Jeffries won, and Brady had the new champion as well as the former. And he rematched them.

Nothing like this will happen if Overlin or Abrams meets Soose when Billy lays the title on the line. Not that we think either is a lead-pipe cinch to beat Billy over a 15-round route.

The idea solution of the Overlin-Abrams snag would be for one or the other to eat his way into the light-heavyweight division. But the careers of these two intelligent guys follow such a pattern of sameness—even to service in the Navy—that if one bulged into the 175-pound division the other would, too. So perhaps it is best that they stay where they belong, in the middle of the muddleweight division.

Everybody's Irish Came Out In Hot-Headed Turner Bout

Three Irishmen, Pat Fraley, Joe Cox and Referee Casey Berger, turned the main wrestling bout at Turner's Arena into a very fine brawl last night before Fraley finally won with a knockout punch after 24 minutes.

Fraley unveiled a novel trick, the donkey kick, which served him to good advantage at times when Joe was particularly difficult. To execute the stunt, the hefty Patrick would leave his feet in a ponderous leap, make a full body twist in mid-air and land both dogs jarringly in the Cox puss. Joe didn't like this at all, and said as much to Referee Berger. However, nothing could be done about it as someone had neglected to mention this manuever in the rule book, and silence seemed to give consent.

Joe, just returned to Fourteenth Street from foreign fields, was as mean as ever and the fans soon remembered how they used to hate him and gave him a cordial reception. He started the dirt at the whistle and Pat looked hurt and somewhat puzzled when Joe poked a grimy finger in his eye.

With the ice broken, both lads tossed all gentlemanly instincts to the winds and some 1,200 fans loved it. Referee Berger was forced into the melee several times in his efforts to restore order. The ring became too small a field and the battlers took their feud into the crowd.

Finally, after both had been bouncing around amongst the paying guests Berger got them both back in the ring together and as he did Fraley brought a punch up with him and floored Joe for the count. Joe was disgruntled at the gross injustice of it all, and protested from the ring that he was the true victor. The Post score sheet gave him one customer who agreed, and Mr. Cox shook that gent's hand warmly before retiring.

Ace Freeman put Angelo Leone away with a pair of flying tackles and a body press in 16½ minutes, and his boon companion, Maurice La Chappelle, disposed of one Dominic Serio in 17 with a dropkick. In the opener, Tommy Rae and Legs Grobmier struggled to a rough, tough and dirty draw.

Uline Signs Louis Trudel For Ice Team

The newly organized Washington Uline ice hockey team began to take tangible form yesterday with announcement by President Michael J. Uline that the first player had been signed for the team's debut this season in the American League.

Player No. 1 is Louis Trudel, purchased from the Montreal Canadiens of the National Hockey League. Trudel, a native of Salem, Mass., is a left winger and a natural left-handed shot. Standing 5 feet 11 inches and weighing 170 pounds, he has been playing professional hockey since 1933 when he broke in with the Tulsa Club.

Coach Ching Johnson and Manager Lee J. Perrin of the Uline team, are now in Canada on a scouting trip, which they hope will uncover about a dozen promising youngsters. Already lined up for duty with the Ulines are as many seasoned campaigners, most of them professionals.

Commission Sanctions Archibald-Wright Fight August 19

Alvis Wins In Dispute With Board

Joe Turner to Stage 25-Round Fight Between Bill Poland And Eddie Blunt

By Tony Neri

District boxing's eternal triangle—Joe Turner, Ray Alvis and the D. C. Boxing Commission—is back in the news again. There is this to report:

1—Promoter Alvis, who was supposed to get his wrist slapped by the commission for prematurely announcing a Joey Archibald-Chalky Wright fight, escaped with official sanction for the match on August 19.

2—Promoter Turner received commission approval of a heavyweight card featuring Bill Poland and Eddie Blunt in a 25-round match at Griffith Stadium on August 26.

3—Something is screwy, because Turner yesterday was loudly quoting Commission Chairman Claude Owen to the effect that the commission would not permit any fight to be staged here before his August 28 show, Alvis' claims to the contrary.

Owen left town last night and Promoter Turner's claims of preference for his show could not be corroborated, but earlier in the day Thomas P. Morgan, jr., commission member, gave Alvis definite assurance for the August 19 date.

Bout at Stadium

Alvis had planned to stage the Wright-Archibald fight at Riverside but yesterday obtained Griffith Stadium.

The commission turned thumbs down on the fight being advertised for the featherweight title. And in the modified contracts, the words "for the world's featherweight championship" have been deleted. The District is a member of the National Boxing Commission and recognizes Richard Lemos as champion.

New York and Maryland will recognize the bout as a title affair. Morgan phoned Gen. Phelan, chairman of the New York Commission, and Phelan stated that the fight would be recognized in New York as a title fight. Baltimore also okayed the match.

Scott vs. Savold

Meanwhile, Turner announced that his show will go on as scheduled. He plans to pit Buddy Scott, local heavyweight, against Lee Savold, of Des Moines, Iowa, in a ten-rounder; Poland against Blunt in the 25-round headliner, and on hand, ready to fight, are Pat Comiskey and Melio Bettina. Opponents for the latter three have not been announced as yet.

Poland, managed by Jack Kearns, recently knocked out Harry Bobo in Baltimore. Kearns talks of Poland in glowing terms, hailing the young heavyweight as the coming champion. Blunt holds victories over Buddy Baer, Abe Simon and Tony Musto.

Kearns has been in town the last two days trying to get the backing of the Variety Club in putting over the August 26 show. Each year the Variety Club stages a boxing contest to raise money for charity. As yet the Variety Club has not given its sanction. The body is expected to hold a meeting this morning when Carter Barron, the major-domo of the club, returns to Washington.

Guarantee Posted

Getting back to the Alvis-promoted fight, it was learned that Adam Hats will broadcast the 15-round battle. Alvis has placed with Nat Fleisher, editor of the Ring Magazine, the $8,000 guarantee demanded by Al Weill, manager of Archibald. Around Post Square it was asked, how can Alvis guarantee $8,000 for this fight when the Archibald-Jeffra bout recently held here drew slightly over $1,000?

The answer may lie in the Adam Hat broadcast tie-up. Are the radio sponsors putting up more than half the dough?

Fishing . . .

Special Anglers' Week-End Report

New Jersey to Cape Hatteras, moderate north or northeast winds and some cloudiness over north portion and moderate northwest or north winds with local thunderstorms or squalls over south portion Friday. Outlook for Saturday: Moderate winds, mostly north or northeast, and generally fair weather.

Paul Otterbach, Werner Barthelmess, Hugh Frain, Henry Stake, Frank Schmunk, Johnny Houser, H. T. Scrivener, C. T. McPherson, and Edward Anderson, all engravers of Washington, had quite a time with the bonita and tuna at Ocean City, Md. How they all ever got together is beyond us. We have not heard of any engravers convention at Ocean City.

JACK BELL

Fishing out of two boats in a very choppy sea, about 35 miles out, they caught eight tuna ranging from 38 to 41 pounds, and 50 bonita.

Frank Shmunk, tells us they all could have caught many more tuna, but the sea was too choppy. As it was they only fished three hours. We believe it was more than some members of the party got . . . mal de mer.

We have heard of several very nice small-mouth bass taken out of the Potomac River and Monocacy Creek, this week, and why one does not register them for some of the prizes offered in Washington, it is beyond us. Milt Gordon, at Sport Center has three large trophies to be given as prizes for the largest white marlin; bluefish; and fresh water black bass. Washington and nearby Virginia and Maryland anglers only are eligible. Get an entry blank and ask Milt, at Sport Center, to show you the trophies.

Twenty-four channel bass, the largest weighing 51 pounds were taken in Oregon Inlet, N. C., by Joe Mackey, of Manteo, N. C. He also caught two dolphin, one weighing 5 pounds.

Capt. Ken Ward, of Manteo had a party of anglers off Oregon Inlet, who caught 18 dolphin the largest weighing 8 pounds, they also caught one albacore.

Dan Furr, of Asheville, N. C., with a party of several friends, left port at Morehead City, N. C., at 2 a. m. Three hours later "too tired to pull in any more," they returned to port, with 150 dolphin, averaging 5 pounds, the largest a 12 pounder. The dolphin went equally well for shrimp bait, feathers or squid, anything white.

Fishing nets seized by Conservation Agencies are playing a definite part in Uncle Sam's defense program. Nets confiscated for illegal use in Michigan are being turned over to the Army, who weave branches and other material with them to camouflage guns and other military works. One Virginian, when he heard of this said: "The State of Virginia sure could lend a helping hand in this work."

We know that a man's liable to be mighty busy every weekend during the fishing season, but don't forget to spend a little time with your hunting dog. It's easy to let your dog get fat and lazy in the kennel during the summer, but it's not giving your hunting pal an even break.

Of course, you won't run him in the fields or woods during the game hatching and breeding season, but you can take him along when you go fishing or swimming. Regular exercise will keep your dog hard and in top shape for the day when hunting season rolls around again.

A $20 backcast was bad news to an angler fishing a stream in Somerset County, Me., the other day. He was using worms in waters open to fly fishing only. As a warden appeared the angler hurried a backcast to snap the garden hackle from the feathered hook but there was a tree limb in the way. The line snarled. The helpful warden unsnarled it and his honor said "twenty bucks and don't get caught doing it again . . . that is after you get your license back."

Center Market's Streak Broken

Reddinger limited Center Market to a pair of hits, a triple by Pusateri and a single by Watt.

D. G. S. scored a run in each of the last three innings of the seven-inning game.

Riggs Paces Net Advance at Southampton

By the Associated Press

Southampton, N. Y., July 31.—Bobby Riggs and Gardnar Mulloy with their delicate chop strokes; Ted Schroeder with his ponderous forehand, and Frank Kovacs with practically everything in the book, including a fair share of comedy, each won two matches today to reach the semifinal round of the fifty-first annual Meadow Club Invitation Tennis Tournament.

Riggs, the Clinton (S. C.) little man, who is making a serious bid for his old No. 1 national ranking, disposed of Seymour Greenberg, Chicago's Big Ten champion, 6—3, 6—1, in the third round, and then followed with a 6—3, 6—4 triumph over Bitsy Grant, of Atlanta, in the quarter-finals.

Bobby's opponent tomorrow will be Mulloy. The Coral Gables (Fla.) stylist first beat Sidney Wood of the home club, 6—2, 6—2, and repeated at 6—4, 6—0, over young Billy Talbert, of Cincinnati. Riggs and Mulloy employed similar tactics, mixing up short trap shots with long drives to the corners.

Kovacs, bothered by recurrent cramps in his right leg, trotted out his sizeable repertory of strokes and turned in a 6—8, 6—4, 7—5 victory over Francisco Segura, champion of Ecuador, and a subsequent 6—0, 9—7 affair with Robin Hippenstiel, of San Bernardino, Calif. Hippenstiel took all sorts of liberties with Frankie's service before yielding.

Schroeder moved at an even pace through two straight-set decisions over Ted Olewine, of Santa Monica, Calif., and Russell Bobbitt, of Atlanta.

Pro-Amateur Handicapping Is Altered

Amateurs with handicaps of five or less will play from scratch while those with six or more will receive half-handicap allowance in the Middle Atlantic P. G. A. pro-amateur tournament Monday at Kenwood Country Club.

Each professional will be allowed three partners in the 18-hole affair, substituted for the Washington Open. Plans for the latter event are still indefinite as Al Houghton, M. A. P. G. A. tournament chairman from this city is still looking for a course and sponsor.

The plan of the low handicapped amateurs playing from scratch is a result of the handicaps of the city's best golfers ranging from scratch to five, although they all play within a stroke or two of each other.

MANOR

Mrs. L. G. Pray and Mrs. J. E. Nell were deadlocked, each three down to par, at the halfway mark of the Punch Bowl trophy play at Manor yesterday, an annual 36-hole match play against par event.

Mrs. H. A. Neff and Mrs. J. T. Powell were tied for the runner-up spot, each five down. Mrs. Pray has a four handicap, Mrs. Nell and Mrs. Powell 12 and Mrs. Neff 15. The second and final round will be played today.

ARMY AND NAVY

A compilation of scores in the Newman Trophy play at Army and Navy found Hank Gibbins the winner with a 36-hole total of 153-10, 143. Ralph Bogart, the District champion, was tied for second with 149-3, 146, to Col. K. Buchanan's 151-5, 146.

National Amateur Entries Close at 5 P. M.

The national amateur championship entry deadline expires today at 5 o'clock with the U. S. G. A. offices in New York. Amateurs must have the forms in the hands of the golf body, plus the $5 entry fee. Sectional qualifying rounds will be held at C. C. of Maryland August 14 and the championship proper at Omaha, Neb., August 25-30.

Entries for the women's N. B. C. cup play Monday at Columbia also close today at 1 o'clock. The event is open to class A players only.

Teter Show Thrills 10,000 At Speedway

Lucky Teter and his troupe of self-styled Hell Drivers made a triumphal return to Washington last night after an absence of two years and performed their death-defying stunts before an estimated 10,000 fans, largest crowd ever to attend the West Lanham Speedway.

Teter climaxed the two-hour program by driving a stock sedan in a 64-foot leap from one elevated ramp to another, clearing a huge transport truck. The leaping car nearly missed the landing ramp, striking about 7 feet from its end and throwing up a shower of sparks and parts that were torn loose by the impact.

Teter, a 200-pound daredevil from Nobelsville, Ind., was operating all evening under the handicap of bothersome hip and shoulder injuries received late in the afternoon as he and his troupe were testing the West Lanham track which is shorter and more highly banked than they were used to. Teter was hurt when he misjudged a motorcycle leap and was thrown to the ground. He was said to be suffering from water on the hip and bruises around his shoulders. He plans to visit a hospital in Philadelphia, next site of his show, for a check-up. Also hurt in pre-show practice was Bob Hutchinson, driver of one of the cars that later was used for head-on collision at about 35 miles per hour.

The head-on collision between two old limousine-style wrecks, which Teter picked up from a Maryland junk dealer, was, next to Teter's final "Rocket Leap," the most thrilling event on the card. The crash cars were folded like telescopes and it took the best part of 15 minutes for attendants, with aid of tow trucks, to pry them apart.

Another of the stunts especially pleasing to the fans was performed by Dale O'Brien, a 138-pound Ireland-born lad, who lay on the ground and allowed a large truck to pass over his chest, with only a thin board between his body and wheels which, if they had touched him, would have crushed the life from him.

Charles Benadum, 71, Harness Figure, Dies

Muncie, Ind., July 31 (AP).—Charles E. Benadum, 71, a harness horse trainer and driver more than 50 years, died today from injuries suffered when he was thrown from a sulky at the Fairgrounds here while exercising a horse last Friday.

Benadum, who had driven on the Grand Circuit and many smaller circuits of the United States and Canada, owned Sag B., world's champion trotter of three decades ago, and such other noted harness horses as Colonel Hedgewood, Hazel B., Silent Direct and Amie Direct.

Louis Boosts Detroit as Site For His Battle With Lou Nova

Champion Drops in to Talk With Jacobs And Goes Away With Joe Gould's Tie

By Bill Boni

Associated Press Sports Writer

New York, July 31.—Joe Louis dropped in on Promoter Mike Jacobs today to discuss "a coupla things we couldn't talk about on the phone." In the space of 45 minutes he had:

Appropriated a flashy red-and-blue necktie which had been around the neck of Joe Gould, manager of Tommy Farr and Jim Braddock, but which very nicely matched the champ's blue plaid sports shirt;

Rated Nova not so good as Billy Conn, whom he knocked out in 13 rounds in his most recent (and eighteenth) title defense, because "he's slower and not the boxer Conn is.

Discussed in great detail his golf game, which after only three years already has yielded him a 74 and a string of low 80s.

The champ looked a bit heavy around the jowls, but there was nothing dull about his conversational reactions.

"Nova? He's good and tough. But he's not as fast as Conn and he can't take a punch any better, and I don't think he can hit as hard as I can, so there you are."

Conn Got by Fifth Round

Jack Dempsey, someone mentioned, said the other day that if Nova got by the fifth round, the Californian would win.

"Tell Dempsey Conn got by the fifth—and he's faster than Nova."

Did he think he'd beat Nova?

"Well," with a slow, sort of playful, grin, "I'm gonna try."

Did he believe in the mystic powers of Yoga, to which Nova subscribes?

"Tony Galento didn't believe in it, did he?" (Galento, you may recall, gave Nova such a beating it took the Californian a year to recover.)

Has the champ any idea of retiring? This time Jacobs provided the answer.

"What's a young man like Joe want to retire for? He's 27. And look at me—I'm 62 and I haven't retired."

When was he going to start training for Nova?

"Oh, not for a while yet—not till after the open golf tournament I'm puttin' on in Detroit, August 2-14. One thousand dollars in cash for the pros, and prizes for the amateurs."

How was his own game?

"Pretty fair. Had me a 74 the other day on the course where they played the national public links championship last year, with a par 71. But I like match play better than medal. Medal play, I gotta keep bearin' down all the way around, keep tryin' to improve my score. Match play, I can play one hole at a time. Put up a quarter a hole and I'm your man. I'll get a lot more 3's and 4's than I will 6's and 7's."

Two Scouts Signed By Detroit Lions

Detroit, July 31 (AP).—The Detroit Lions of the National Professional Football League announced tonight the signing of Clarke Randolph and John Schneller as scouts.

Previously all scouting has been done by coaches. Officials of the Lions said the new scouting system would compare with the work in professional baseball, with Randolph and Schneller reporting on other pro teams and hunting for embryo Lions on college squads.

Printers' Final Matches N. Y. With Detroit

By the Associated Press

Indianapolis, July 31.—Unbeaten Detroit and once-licked New York will battle tomorrow for the Union Printers' International Baseball Championship, a title yielded yesterday by Washington.

Detroit won its fifth straight victory today, beating Chicago, 5 to 4, to move into the finals. New York drew a bye into the finals.

If Detroit wins tomorrow morning's game the title will go to the Motor City team but if New York wins the teams will have to play an afternoon tilt to decide the issue.

Detroit and Chicago were tied today, 4 to 4, going into the seventh inning and the Michigan team pushed across the winning tally on a triple by Ludwig and a single by Stein.

The score:

Detroit	010	030	10x—5	9	0

O'Malley and Pfender; Seddon and Eagan.

Bill Cunningham's Column

A Brand New Football System With Bowl Game Guarantees

Cunningham

Insofar as the undersigned is able to depose and asseverate, the following, and reasonably astounding, billet-doux is an honest document composed in dead earnest and forwarded completely across the continent to me in the best of faith. The letter, so far as I know, is strictly on the level.

The gent who wrote it was one of the greatest punters in U. of Michigan football history, and they've had some great punters at Michigan, where a prayer, a pass and a punt, tried in various combinations, has set that magnificent Maine and Sioux battle band booming, "Hail to the Victors Valiant."

I knew the gentleman, who was then tall, dark and handsome, and who may still be for all I can answer to the contrary, back in 1915, when he served as the kicking coach of our mighty prep school eleven, an indomitable unit which swept with matchless precision and power through . . . well, never mind.

Here's the letter. Football coaches, attention, and hold on to your hats and the side rails:

"Dear Cotton: (That's a quaint conceit ringing across the years from the vanished past when I was a platinum blonde without benefit of drug store)—It's a long time . . . etc . . . don't start dodging. This isn't a touch . . .

"Darling, all my connections are more than I like to realise, of playing, coaching and officiating football, the game has been my hobby and I have made a serious study of it.

"As a result of this study, I have now developed a system of attack which I do not believe can be stopped except by a revision of the rules. I can't stop it myself, and the coaches of three teams, two of them big Southwestern Conference elevens and the other a famous Pacific Coast Conference unit, admit that they can't stop it either.

"I do not know how to market this in such a manner as to bring the best return. It has occurred to me that possibly through your connections, you might be in a position to do something about it.

"This system has never been used because coaches to whom I showed it were personal friends of mine, and have kept their word on the pledges they gave me, although one said he would give his ears if he had the money to meet my terms.

"What I would like to get out of it is a contract as consulting coach for one year at a salary of $4,000, plus 10 per cent of any amount received for post-season games. I profoundly believe this unique attack will put any team with decent material in any Bowl Game in the Nation . . ."

The quick reaction, of course, is to look around for the men in the white coats. There's nothing new in football, or so the saying goes, and it seems to be true. Even Mr. Clarke Shaughnessy's devastating T formation is an oldie that slept until it was new again. With all the Harlows and Joneses and Littles and Blaiks, the Dawsons, Bells, Neylands, Leahys, Wades, Nortons and Phelans taking the game to pieces constantly and putting it back together again, scoop and awake, in squad room and vacation cottage, if any such open-and-shut, sure-fire, triple-riveted, five-star, unstoppable, unbeatable secret existed, it figures that one or a dozen of 'em would have excavated here now.

Still, your crepitating correspondent strives to run a modern shop and to keep an open mind. Who could foresee radio, Hitler or the Hut Sut song? Could be I always say, hesitating to believe any more that anything or anybody is strictly impossible.

Never let it be said that this humble disciple of Homer, the first reporter, ever went short on an old friend or shirked a chance to be of general service. I wouldn't know any more about how to peddle the above than to sing the Star Spangled Banner in classical Chinese, but this column is now being syndicated in all parts of the country, including Eddie Shore's Edmonton, Alberta and balmy Bermuda, and if any coach, north, south, east or west wants direct dickering rights on this Rose Bowl special, I'll furnish this self-nominated gridiron Edison's name and address free and for nothing. I won't print it here because I don't want any warrants sworn out.

And here's my publicity filed contract on the 10 per cent set aside as my agent's commission. If, by any miracle, this gent has come up with something usable, there's a sale, a Bowl Game and real money involved, the college concerned must agree to take my slice of the swag and give some other widow's cotton-headed kid, preferably a center such as I was, a chance at least to get exposed to a college education.

It's nice dreaming, baby.

J. Hal Wins Third Straight Race at Bel Air; Cartel Is Second

Morocco D Runs Third In Feature

Winner Scores After Thrilling Battle; Pays $6.50 Price, Ridden by Miller

By Walter Haight

A Staff Correspondent

Bel Air, Md., July 31.—By winning his third straight race at this meeting, J. Hal, owned by R. C. Waple, of Falls Church, Va., about cinched the distance championship of the plater ranks today. The 4-year-old son of Mate and Parley, a picture horse if there ever was one, stuck to his running guns to win a thrilling photo battle from W. W. Waters' Cartel. The action came in the Churchville Purse, heading the Thursday program. Two and a half lengths behind the keen struggle for first money came Mrs. G. C. Rollings' Morocco D to be third in a field of seven.

Despite his brilliant record over this track, J. Hal was only a lukewarm favorite with a crowd of 5,000 and paid a $6.50 mutuel. The colt was clocked in 1:44 3-5 for the mile and 70 yards over a track that was slightly on the dull side.

J. Hal and Cartel battled from start to finish. The ultimate winner, handled by Jockey George Miller, had from a neck to a half length advantage over Cartel, ridden by Jockey Chester Walters, in the opening half mile. Then Cartel forged to the front but J. Hal was not through. Miller kept him to pressure and he got up in the final jump. The picture showed J. Hal the winner by an inch.

Hot Man was well played but the gelding, foaled by Hot Griddle, failed to run up to the expectations of the hunch players. The day was hot and the air thick.

Favorite players had a good day. Five straight public choices got home in front before Fusionette ended the string by finishing next to last in the sixth event.

Selections at Bel Air

Dear Al:

Owner-Trainer C. M. Feltner is beginning to believe his horses are bridesmaids. He has seen them finish second six times without winning. However, this is not a record for the Berryville, Va., horseman. Last year he had a string of 22 seconds, 6 of them beaten in photos. A. F. Martinez is leading the riders at this meeting. The Cuban boy nosed out Dan Scocca and Carson Kirk at Hagerstown. M. B. Goss, of Winchester, Va., has shipped five horses to Cumberland to await action there beginning next Tuesday. Incidentally, Harry A. Manley, president of that track, was a visitor yesterday. Specs Crawford is leading the steeplechase trainers here with three victories. Post time for the Marlboro meeting will be 2 p. m. Steeplechase Jockey Q. Hellcus, winner of four races here, will go to Saratoga next week to ply his trade. Jockeys Buddy Root and S. Dewain, set down for unfair tactics this week, will have their suspensions continued through Cumberland, a representative of the Maryland Racing Commission reports. T. V. Mountjoy claimed Red Idol, winner of yesterday's fourth race, for $1,000 from Claude Feltner. Henry Bitner, Baltimore sportsman, entertained the scribes and officials at a dinner and a party and he really entertained. Norman Brooks, steeplechase rider who was thrown heavily in Wednesday's race, was back on the grounds yesterday, apparently in good shape. Shilka, 2-year-old, injured and withdrawn from Tuesday's first race, will be sent back to the farm to recuperate. Adolphe Pons, whose county life farm is located a mile from this track, leaves for Saratoga today to sell eight yearlings. Oops, winner of yesterday's first race, is well named, being out of the mare, Upsedaisy. Looks as if I made those No. 1 horses awaken. They have been winning right and left since. Red Idol carried the "ace" saddlecloth yesterday. Jockey Joe O'Malley was so disgusted when First Affair reared and tossed him going to the post for the first race that he sat on the track and threw stones at the mare. Joe, who has figured in many falls since he came to the races, was not hurt. See you on the rail.

BILL.

First race — INGERFIRE has shown speed in two races here and appears ready to leave the maiden ranks today. WHITE SEA saved ground and was third last out. Should be a dangerous contender. ROYAL MOWLEE showed a promising effort earlier in the week.

Second race—POMARY appears to have found the right spot in this field. Needs only the right handling. JAMES PAL is rounding into shape and should be close. SINGLE PLY for the minor award.

Third race—WORTHFUL made a bad landing that probably cost him a victory in his most recent outing. With better racing luck this one looks like the winner. WAR CHAT'S last was a game try. BLENNY was poorly handled last out.

Fourth race—CONQUEROR III was made a good thing here this week. Should improve enough off that effort to score. DOMINAL closes with a rush and deserves attention. LADY MOWLEE would be dangerous if sent postward.

Fifth race—CHIDE may win this at good odds. This one set a swift pace in better company last out. MISS IDENTITY has her speed and is a threat. BULLET B. is the come-from-behind horse.

Sixth race—DASHING DOE likes this route and has plenty of foot. She has been rested and looks like the best. HIBIAZE is a threat at this route. MY FIRST to take care of the others.

Seventh race—BRAZTON looks like the right one in this event. Likes the distance and I see no reason for mistakes. YANKEE LAD to take another place award. BROOKIE BOY could surprise.

Eighth race—CHANNING gets the call in the day's finale. Mud would give WEST SEA an excellent chance. COUNT ME took a purse at this oval and is dangerous.

Best bet—BRAZTON.

CLOCKER MIKE'S SELECTIONS

1—Prestone, Fair Flame, Inserfire.
2—James Pal, Of Course, Pushkin.

7—Yankee Lad, Braxton, Peppery.

Chicago Grain

Chicago, July 31 (AP).—Wheat prices continued to drift lower today, taking a definitely downward trend late in the session after fluctuating erratically above and below previous closing levels most of the time.

Final figures were near the low point of the day, 1½-% lower than yesterday, September, $1.06; December, $1.06⅝-.06¾.

Weakness of cotton, bedding sales and evening up of trade positions prior to release of the August private crop reports were ascribed for most of the selling, but trade generally was sluggish because of cautious operations pending price legislation developments. Some mill support, possibly associated with Army flour buying, developed when 100,000 bushels this week and, belief to check declines at times.

The company, F. B. Davis, jr., chairman and president, said "has been perating practically at capacity in all of its plants so far this year."

"However, effective July 1, 1941," Davis continued, "the Government has taken over the purchase of crude rubber for the entire rubber industry and has arranged for the allotment of gradually reduced amounts of rubber for consumption over the remaining months of 1941."

U. S. Extends Loan Period for Cotton

By the Associated Press

The Agriculture Department announced yesterday that it would allow farmers until October 1 to repay outstanding loans and redeem cotton pledged under 1938, 1939 and 1940 loan programs.

The loans were dated to expire today. Loans outstanding on July 26 involved 491,876 bales, of which 109,214 bales were from the 1940 crop, 2,631 from 1939 and 380,031 from 1938.

Because of recent sharp price advances, many growers already have redeemed and sold their cotton for more than enough to repay their loans.

Further Curbs On Speculation Seen Perilous

By the Associated Press

Chicago, July 31.—A special Board of Trade committee today reported to J. M. Mehl, chief of the Commodity Exchange Administration, that it saw no immediate danger of "unwarranted" speculation in futures prices of surplus agricultural commodities that might require any additional governmental regulatory measures.

The report was a reply to a communication Mehl sent to 18 exchanges operating under the Commodity Exchange Act asking them to determine what precautionary steps, if any, needed to be taken to limit "excessive" speculation.

"On the contrary," the committee's statement said, 'we visualize a decided danger in placing any further curbs on speculation which will make it increasingly difficult for the farmer to receive a fair price for the products of his toil.

"With the huge surpluses of agricultural commodities on hand and with prices of labor and merchandise advancing, it appears that the farmer is more apt to receive a price which is unwarrantedly low due to the absence of speculation."

Pointing out that regulation, supervision and direction of trading "can only be given if organized markets and organized grain trade continue to exist," the committee said "it is essential that the Government cooperate by moving and marketing its huge quantities of wheat and corn through established grain trade channels."

The committee expressed belief that present margin requirements are too stringent, but, because of opposing schools of thought, it did not recommend a lowering of these requirements now.

Mehl told commodity exchanges "it would be unfortunate if excessive speculation should be allowed to develop in this emergency, resulting perhaps in the closing of all commodity futures markets." He said the Secretary of Agriculture had indicated his belief that 'properly conducted futures markets might be a stabilizing influence in these times by diverting speculation from the actual commodities and thus discourage hoarding and inventory speculation."

Six-Month Output Of Cons. Aircraft Shatters Records

San Diego, Calif., July 31 (AP).—Consolidated Aircraft Corporation reported today its production for the first six months of 1941 was nearly four times the company's total output for the entire year of 1940. It did not mention the number of planes involved.

The reivew stated that the San Diego plant, which is concentrating on mass production of four-motor and twin-engine military and naval bombers, has 17 per cent of all the United States aviation business on its books.

New orders received during the last six month amounted to $413,479,552.

New York Cotton

New York, July 31 (AP).—Commission house liquidation and New Orleans selling today pushed cotton futures down for final losses of 27 to 33 points in early trading the market had worked up around $1 a bale on a further rebound from yesterday's precipitant decline.

The nervous and erratic swings indicated the trade's perplexities over price fixing uncertainties, which also made it difficult for Wall Street agents to write business. The day's turnover in gray goods was light.

Stocks Are Irregular As Traders Close Books On Best Recovery Month in More Than a Year

Bidding for rails, aircrafts and specialties put many favorites into new high ground for 1941 with gains of fractions to a point or so in the forenoon. Prices wavered in numerous cases after mid-day and the close was definitely irregular.

Dealings attained a fair amount of speed on the morning push, then slackened in the final hours. Transfers amounted to 853,940 shares against 743,690 Wednesday.

The Associated Press average of 60 stocks was unchanged at 44.1 but on the month was up 2.5 points, widest advance in this composite, except for June a year ago, since September, 1939. The month's activity also was the largest since last December.

The day's stalemate was exemplified by the fact that, of 810 issues traded, 302 were down, 299 up and 209 unchanged.

Growing tax fears and the desire to await Congressional action on the President's anti-inflation recommendations helped restrain buyers, brokers said. Little speculative inspiration was found in far eastern news and German-Russia war bulletins.

The tax picture was further clouded by the Bethlehem Steel statement, published after the close, which revealed that, due to exceptionally heavy provisions for income and excess profits imposts, June quarter net was cut to $1.34 a common share compared with $3.07 in the like 1940 months and $2.95 in the initial 1941 quarter. Operations were better than capacity during the period. Directors, though, voted a common dividend of $1.50, the same as paid previously this year. Bethlehem common stock ended up ⅝ of a point at 78.

Rails were buoyed by a less than seasonal decline in last week's freight loadings and growing optimism over operating revenues. Cheerful earnings figures helped some aircrafts and individual issues elsewhere. Air transport stocks slipped on word more planes would have to be relinquished for the British and Chinese.

Mild comfort was derived from the sale of a stock exchange seat for $35,000, up $3,000.

Consolidated Aircraft and Lockheed were up better than a point each. Minor improvement was retained by New York Central, Southern Pacific, Southern Railway, Northern Pacific, Illinois Central, Paramount Pictures, American Cable, Union Carbide, Wheeling Steel, American Telephone and du Pont.

In the losing bracket were United States Steel, Republic Steel, Crucible, General Motors, Goodyear, United States Rubber, International Harvester, Santa Fe, Pepsi-Cola, Celanese, Anaconda, Montgomery Ward, Eastern Air Lines and American Airlines.

Coffee Prices Skyrocket on Brazil Action

By the Associated Press

The Santos contract in the New York Coffee and Sugar Exchange closed .39 to .51 of a cent a pound higher. Unexpected raising of minimum prices by Brazilian authorities prompted a big demand from trade and general sources.

Cotton futures vibrated to trade fears and hopes with regard to price fixing plans. In an erratic swing the market shed gains of around $1 a bale to close to $1.35 to $1.65 a bale net lower.

Cottonseed oil prices were marked down .13 to .17 of a point and hides and rubber showed minor retreats. World sugar pushed ahead .09 to .12½ of a cent. Strain tin was unchanged to ¼ of a cent higher.

Chicago wheat dipped ⅛ to ⅝ of a cent a bushel; corn lost ⅛ to ¼. The Associated Press weighted index of 35 wholesale spot staples declined to 89.40 per cent of the 1926 average from 89.64 per cent Wednesday.

In Chicago hogs were weak to 10 cents lower for medium weights and strong to 10 cents higher for heavier. Cattle were steady to as much as 25 cents lower and lambs steady to slightly higher.

Will Cost 15 Million a Year

Rio de Janeiro, July 31 (AP).—The Brazilian coffee department announced today export price increases which will cost United States coffee drinkers an estimated 15 million dollars additional annually.

The increases range from 28 milreis (about $1.40) to 46 milreis (about $2.30) per 60-kilogram sack (about 132 pounds).

Walter J. Donnelly, United States commercial attache, said this would raise the retail price in the United States about 1.5 cents a pound.

The Brazilian action was believed to have resulted from similar Colombian increases.

The United States now guarantees annual quotas of 9,300,000 sacks from Brazil and 3,300,000 from Colombia.

N. Y. Central Seeks To Pay Bank Loan Before Maturity

New York, July 31 (AP).—In Wall Street, where stories of railroads' misfortune and hard luck circulated widely less than a year ago, eyebrows lifted today as the financial news ticker carried a story that the New York Central wanted to pay off a $16,000,000 bank loan before maturity—and was having a little trouble in persuading the creditors to accept the money.

The loan is due May 1, 1942, and the terms provided it could not be paid off prior to maturity. The railroad was reported negotiating with the bank group lenders to advance the due date.

Financial circles associated the road's desire to anticipate the loan with the general and sharp recovery in railroad earnings under the stimulus of the defense program.

Bethlehem Sales Set Record, Net Slumps

By the Associated Press

New York, July 31.—The Bethlehem Steel Corporation set records in the June quarter for production, pay roll, employes and taxes, it was disclosed today in its quarterly statement.

Because of the taxes, the company's net income for the period was only $5,651,457, or $1.34 a common share, compared with $10,807,318, or $3.07 a share in the like 1940 period and $10,436,028, or $2.95 in the first three months of 1941.

The company provided $17,630,000 for income and Federal and excess profits taxes in the June quarter as compared with $7,270,000 in the first quarter. The large increase was made necessary, it was explained, to provide for an excess in the likely first quarter taxes over what was expected at that time.

Directors ordered a dividend of $1.50 a share on the common stock, payable September 2 to stock of record August 11. The same amount was paid in March and June while $1.25 a share was paid last September.

At 102.6 Per Cent of Capacity

Disclosing that the company operated during the first three months at 102.6 per cent of the theoretical capacity and had, for 12 months past, surpassed 100 per cent of that capacity, E. G. Grace, president, said a shortage of iron and steel scrap might shortly hamper production throughout the steel industry.

He disclosed that the Government has under consideration a plan for a country-wide scrap iron and steel drive similar to the recent aluminum drive.

Discussing the extent of taxation, Grace said 69 per cent of the company's total earnings went to the tax collector. He estimated this rate as equal to $23 on each share of common stock outstanding.

Earns $2.60 a Ton

The company's profits for six months from all operations, including shipbuilding and repairs, he said, were equal to $2.68 for every ton of steel produced or, in other words, 4 per cent of the value of sales. In comparison, operations during the whole year of 1940 were equal to a profit of $4.54 a ton, or 8 per cent of the billing.

He estimated the value of orders on hand on June 30—of which 35 to 40 per cent are directly for defense—at $1,367,500,000, the largest in the history of the company. This figure compares with $1,323,200,000 on March 31 and only $288,521,487 on June 30, 1940.

He declined to disclose the value of tonnage of shipments in the three months ended June 30 but said they, too, constituted a record.

Other records were established for employment: 156,801 workers in the June quarter were paid $84,629,000, compared with 112,316 who received $48,457,000 in the like 1940 period, and 141,321 receiving $68,406,000 in the first quarter of 1941.

Their average hourly earnings were $1.05 for 39.2 hours a week in the June quarter, compared with 97 cents for 37.9 hours a week in the March quarter, and 93 cents for 39 hours a week in June quarter of 1940.

Grace disclosed that the company has spent this year $18,200,000 of its own money for plant expansion and intends to spend $34,000,000 more in the coming months. The company also has spent for the account of the Government $28,000,000 and must spend $52,000,000 more for this account in the construction of new factories to be owned by the Government but operated by Bethlehem.

July Stock Trade Heaviest of Year

New York, July 31 (AP).—Trading in the New York Stock Exchange rose sharply during July to a total of 17,871,487 shares compared with 10,461,813 in June. This is the largest number of shares which have changed hands in any month since last December, when trading totaled 18,397,158 shares.

The turnover in bonds also increased, rising to a dollar value of $189,243,400 from $149,426,000 in June. It was the largest volume since April when bond trading amounted to $209,471,000.

Six-Month Soap Sales Reported 19% Heavier

New York, July 31 (AP).—The Association of American Soap and Glycerine Producers reported today that manufacturers' soap sales for the six months ended June 30 exceeded by 19.3 per cent any comparable period since January 1, 1935.

Sales for the half year aggregated 1,713,708 pounds for soaps other than liquid, and 1,550,665 gallons for liquid, or a total dollar value of $170,359,284.

Figures were based on reports of 70 companies making about nine-tenths of all the soap made and sold in the United States.

Engineering Awards Exceed 173 Million

New York, July 31 (AP).—Heavy engineering awards this week totaled $173,094,000, a decline of 16 per cent below the near record level of the previous week but 93 per cent greater than the same week a year ago, Engineering News-Record reported today.

The total was the fifth highest of the year and capped a month of record construction awards. Federal work, almost entirely defense construction, accounted for more than two-thirds of the week's contracts.

Rail Loadings Up 25% in Week

The Association of American Railroads reported yesterday that 897,399 cars of revenue freight were loaded during the week ended last Saturday.

This was a decrease of 1,971 cars, or two-tenths of 1 per cent, compared with the preceding week; an increase of 179,361 cars, or 25 per cent, compared with a year ago, and an increase of 241,868 cars, or 36.9 per cent, compared with 1939.

A decline in grain shipments and ore loadings were responsible for the dip in total carloadings. The decrease, however, was less than seasonal.

Prices Low, Georgia Stops Peach Harvest

Atlanta, July 31 (AP).—Abandonment of harvesting in orchards where most of the fruit is small was reported by some Georgia peach growers today. Declining prices were blamed.

The peach market is "more demoralized than it has ever been," reported grower T. J. Glover, of Newnan. Growers must have a dollar a bushel to break even, said Claude Barnett, foreman of a big peach farm at Commerce.

Declining prices were caused by drought, which delayed Georgia's crop maturity 30 days, this hitting the market simultaneously with a heavy crop from other sections, State Agriculture Commissioner Tom Linder said.

Write-Down to Pave Way for Dividends

New York, July 31 (AP).—The St. Regis Paper Co. announced that stockholders at a special meeting today at Watertown, N. Y., approved the directors' recommendations for a write-down of certain of the company's investments.

The affected investments were restated as $3,140,001, against the company's book valuation at December 31, 1940, of $22,416,907.

Roy K. Ferguson, president, said the revision "aids in preparing the way for a resumption of dividends on the preferred and common stocks," but he added that a definite date for dividend resumption could not be predicted.

Steel Employment Sets Another High

New York, July 31 (AP).—Employment in the steel industry rose during June for the fifteenth consecutive month, the American Iron and Steel Institute reported today.

Wage earners and salaried employes reached a new peak of 538,000, an increase of 6,000 over May. A year earlier steel employment totaled 535,000.

The institute said total pay rolls in June amounted to $110,504,000, slightly less than May pay rolls of $115,267,000 because of fewer working days. In June a year ago steel pay rolls totaled $77,388,000.

Big Board Seat Price Equals High for Year

New York, July 31 (AP).—Sale of a membership in the New York Stock Exchange was reported today at $35,000, up $3,000 from three sales two days ago.

This equals the highest price of the year, another seat having been sold for the same amount last January. The low for the year was $20,000.

Draft Is Big Question In Football Outlook

Minnesota Liked as National Champions By Members of National Grid Commissioners

By the United Press

Miami Beach, Fla., July 31.—Members of the National Association of Football Commissioners tonight said the draft had left the national gridiron picture hazy, but they expected Minnesota to be the Nation's number one team this fall.

After considering changes that might result from the draft taking stars from football squads, the commissioners were inclined to favor Minnesota as the team most likely to lead this fall's gridiron parade. Last year's bowl teams probably will be among the top-notchers, the officials said.

The commissioners said Stanford, Tennessee, Boston College, the Texas Aggies, Fordham and other football powerhouses might be shoved into the also-ran class when Uncle Sam finished lining up soldiers.

Eagles, Rams Good

Asa S. Bushnell, Eastern Intercollegiate Association commissioner, predicted leading teams of the East would be Boston College, Fordham, Cornell and Pennsylvania.

Oklahoma will have the strongest team in the Big Six and one of the Nation's top elevens, if the draft doesn't take too heavy a toll, Commissioner Reaves E. Peters said. Should Oklahoma lose its men to the Army—and that may happen—Missouri's youthful sophomore team probably will ride to victory in the conference, he predicted.

Ed Utherton, Pacific Coast commissioner, forecast a three-way battle among Stanford, Oregon and Washington for the conference title. He named California as the dark horse.

"The Big Ten seems tighter this year than ever before," Maj. John L. Griffith, commissioner from the Mid-West reported. "Michigan can't possibly replace Harmon; Minnesota will be strong; and Ohio State may come through with a surprise. Notre Dame will be potent as usual."

Griffith said the Big Ten had not been hit hard by selective service because most of its players were under draft age.

Alabama, Tennessee, Clemson, North Carolina and Duke probably will dominate the South, according to Arthur E. Hutchens, commission president. "But if Sinkwich and Company of Georgia start clicking anything can happen," he said.

U. C. L. A.'s Question

Attention suggested U. C. L. A. would bear watching as a national threat. He said also that Santa Clara would be improved.

The commissioners agreed that Texas A. and M. should dominate the Southwest Conference. Southern California was looked upon as the country's big question mark, due to the recent death of its Coach, Howard Jones.

Mayo Case Is Appealed After Hearing

By the Associated Press

Los Angeles, July 31.—The case of Ballplayer Eddie Mayo, of Los Angeles, suspended one year on charges that he spat in an umpire's face, went back to Minor League Head William G. Bramham on appeal after a closed hearing today.

Umpire Ray Snyder reiterated that Mayo expectorated in his face in protesting a decision during the Los Angeles-Hollywood series July 13.

Mayo denied the accusation. He did not make the denial in Snyder's presence, however, and President W. C. Tuttle, of the Pacific Coast League, who conducted the hearing, said afterward that Mayo declined to cross-examine Snyder when they were brought face to face.

Tuttle, at the time of the alleged offense, wired Bramham and inquired the penalty for the incident. Bramham replied that the minimum was one year's suspension.

Tuttle took this as a final decision from the minor league head. Today he admitted he was in error, and said he should have given more time to an investigation of Snyder's report before imposing the suspension. "But my decision," Tuttle said, "still stands. The next step is up to Judge Bramham since the testimony of this present hearing will go to him in the nature of an appeal. If he, or Judge Landis, wishes to rescind or temper my ruling, it will be okay with me."

He said that U. S. O. officials had phoned him Tuesday and pledged their 100 per cent cooperation. Schwegel said he was flying home to Dayton, Ohio today for a vacation before returning here about August 18 to get down to business in his new position.

With Quantico having refused Georgetown's offer, which established precedent, it would appear that the Hoyas best bet for an opponent would be an Eastern all-star Army team. It seems logical that if Quantico with its reputedly higher percentage of college graduates, including athletes, does not believe it could give Georgetown a battle, then neither could any other single unit.

A Georgetown-Army all-star game, if held in Washington, would be a cinch to attract upward of 25,000 fans, including many Congressmen and other leading Government officials. It would do much to cement better relations between the military and the civilians and, above all, it probably would be a whale of a game.

Coach of the all-star Army team could be one of the Nation's leading teachers of football—none other than Maj. Bob Neyland, of Tennessee, who is now on active Army duty.

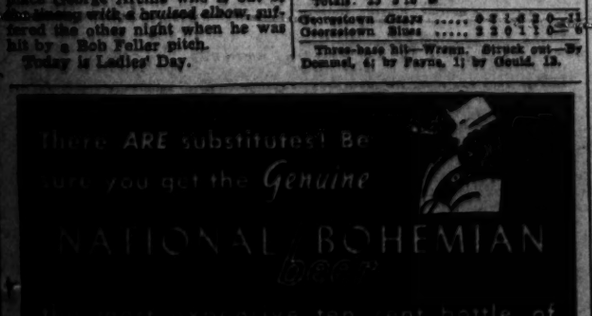
base for the Nats today. Morris Aderholt, called up from the Nats' Springfield farm, will replace George Archie. It will Aderholt's third trial with the Nats. He was with the club three years ago as a rookie out of Wake Forest College and was dismissed after a brief trial at second base. Last fall he was called up again, and after hitting a home run in his first game, impressed nobody with his hitting or fielding.

This time Aderholt comes to the Nats as a third baseman. He has been playing the position at Springfield for only a month, however. The intriguing item in his play has been his .331 batting average. He'll replace George Archie who is out of the lineup with a bruised elbow, suffered the other night when he was hit by a Bob Feller pitch.

Today is Ladies' Day.



All-Stars Meet Baltimore Ten At Stadium

The first of a series of contests to determine the fastest individual softball player and base running team in the city will be held tonight at Washington Softball Stadium as the Stadium All-Stars, selected from 12 of the city's outstanding teams, engage the crack Baltimore Gas & Electric ten in a doubleheader at 8 p. m. The sprints will begin at 7:30 p. m. with the base running relays scheduled for between games.

Individual sprints will consist of dashes from home plate to first base, a distance of 20 yards, and base circling contests, a matter of 80 yards and three right angle turns. The fastest base running team will be determined in a relay base circling contest wherein all teams entered will select their four fastest players, each of whom will circle the bases once, a distance of 320 yards. Individual sprint favorites are Bill "Pheasant" Baldwin, of Pepco, who recently captured the 75-yard dash at Griffith Stadium as a feature of the Kavakos Grill-Senate Beer game; Tommy Boggs, of Kavakos, runnerup, and George Boswell, of Adam Hats, who placed third.

The sprints will be conducted by local D. C. A. A. U. officials including Charley Reynolds, Winfree Johnson, "Dutch" Axt, Joe Bertilini, Earle Weeks, Joe Aronoff, "Turkey" Norris and Charly Waldron.

Players selected to take part in the twin-bill against the colorful Baltimoreans, who are already overwhelming favorites to capture the State of Maryland softball title are: Adams, of Garvin Grill, Stommel, of Fat Boy and Lamb, of Kavakos Grill, catchers; "Cannonball" Jack Smith, of Kavakos, Harold Steffes, of Fat Boy, Ken Thomas, of Pepco, Bluhm, of Adam Hats, Todryk, of U. Quito, Ecuador, July 31 (AP).—Diplomatic representatives of Argentina, Brazil and the United States announced today that Peru had agreed to halt hostilities with Ecuador.

The Brazilian and United States Ministers, Caio Mello Franco and Boaz Long, also broadcast expressions of satisfaction that the truce halting the century-old conflict would aid in establishing peace on the continent.

Sitting North and South were Karl Schneider and Hans Jellinck, both outstanding players and members of the famous Austrian team which won so many international championships.

At 15 out of 16 tables East or West was declarer at a sacrifice bid of seven hearts, doubled. When the young Austrian played the hand, North passed three times before making a call and succeeded in stopping the bidding with his partner declarer at an easy spade small slam, doubled.

South opened the bidding with one spade, and after West doubled North said nothing. Although his partner jumped to game in spades following East's two-heart bid, North passed West's five-heart overcall.

South once more mentioned his spades, and once again North passed. East went to a lam in hearts, and South glumly gave up; but now, after three 'no bids," Schneider said six spades, which was doubled by West.

Jellinck, who is reputed to be a "perfect player," never making a mistake, found the contract easy to fulfill. Trumps were drawn after winning the diamond lead with the ace, and another diamond lead established the suit. He gave up only one trick, the queen of diamonds.

The loss for East and West at a seven-heart sacrifice was down six, or 1,100 points, doubled, not vulnerable. Observers commented that the excellent Czech pair, sitting East and West, could not be blamed, for they had never before seen a player who, sure of a slam, passed bids of four and five and then himself bid six. Schneider's strategy was applauded all around.

There is just as much subtlety and skill to defensive play as there is to bidding, but the mark of every accomplished player is the care with which he attends to the mechanics of defense in leading and, more particularly, discarding.

As soon as we gain respect for the low and seemingly inconsequential cards and follow their play with as much care as the more vital cards, we lay the foundation for a skillful defense.

Listen! with Glynn

"Masterworks of Music," the half hour program of symphony and operatic melody which you hear over WJSV Mondays through Fridays at 11 p. m., is changing its introductory and closing theme.

The change, effective next Monday, is not without its social significance. For the new theme is to be the mighty opening bars of Beethoven's Fifth Symphony, which, if you're up on your current events, you'll realize is also the theme of the "V for Victory" campaign.

"Fate, knocking at the door" is the usual interpretation of these famed notes and the three short notes, followed by the long, is now being accepted throughout the world as the symbol of the moral strength which ultimately will assure for the peoples of the earth the defeat of the powers of oppression which now seem so strong.

The majestic theme with which you'll become familiar as you hear it on "Masterworks of Music" night after night is being played by Leopold Stokowski and the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra.

Since the "Masterworks" program is carried on scores of radio stations throughout the country, its use to popularize the worthy theme is probably one of the most effective that could be thought of in the campaign which has freedom for all people as its goal.
